Committee Decides on 6 New Schools For District

Would Replace 11 Now Operating; Program to Cost $2,579,000

By Christine Sadler.

Six new elementary school buildings to replace 11 antiquated structures and start the District on an extensive school replacement program were decided upon yesterday by the Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

The new buildings, three of them in the Southeast section of the city, would cost $2,579,000. They are:

Peabody School, to replace the present school by that name built in 1879, and located at Fifth and C streets northeast. The new structure would have 24 rooms, including an assembly hall-gymnasium, and cost $500,000. Of this amount, $34,000 would purchase land for physical education purposes.

Washington Circle School, to replace Corcoran, Grant and Weightman schools, all in the vicinity of M and Twenty-fifth streets northwest. This structure of 24 rooms, would cost $500,000, $240,000 being for a new site.

Replaces Van Buren

Ketcham School Annex, to be added to present school by that name at Fifteenth and U streets southeast and cost $229,000. This annex would replace the Van Buren School and Annex on W street

A new 24-room structure at Eleventh and G streets southeast to cost $500,000 and replace the present Cranch, Tyler, and Van Ness schools, all located in that vicinity. The cost includes $125,000 for new site.

Stevens School, to replace the present structure by that name on Twenty-first street northwest between K and L and to cost $500,000, including $240,000 for new site. This school also would have 24 rooms.

A new 16-room extensible building in the vicinity of Giddings School, at Third and G streets southeast, to replace the present Lincoln School located at Second and E streets southeast. Cost, $350,000; $95,000 going for the site.

The first four of these schools would be for white pupils and the other two for colored. Their construction would be in accordance with Congressional recommendations made in 1908.

"Washington has been growing so rapidly it has taken all the money to build new schools in the suburbs or newly added sections. Some of these old schools are terrible. Dr. Ballou, at our request, brought in the list of the worst in the city," Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the subcommittee, declared.

He announced members of the sub-committee would go on a school tour before Congress adjourned.

Nine other new schools to replace 19 other elementary schools and a junior high school were on the "emergency" list presented by Dr. Ballou. Senator Overton expressed hope that the replacement program started this year will be continued until it "makes all the suggestions on the list."

Doubles House Appropriation

The $2,579,000 added to District expenses by the Senate subcommittee would more than double the amount which the House approved in the local appropriations bill, raising the school total to $4,323,000.

John Nolen, jr., and T. S. Settle, director and secretary of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, registered their disapproval of the plan to build the new Abbott Vocational School on the site of the old Tuberculosis Hospital at Thirteenth and Upshur streets northwest.

They pointed out that the new

40,000 Gather for Preakness, Expecting Johnstown to Win

It's Derby Winner Against a Field of 5, Aver Baltimoreans; Even Challedon's Trainer Says, 'Second Money Isn't Tin'

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico, Md., May 12.—Johnstown against five rivals. That's the lineup for tomorrow's forty-ninth running of the ancient and honorable Preakness here on the edge of Baltimore where one doesn't know whether to do the minuet or the Susie-Q. Yes, and you can bet an ocean liner and collect a rowboat, because it looks as if the gallant winner of the Kentucky Derby is going to be 1 to 5, or less, when Starter Jim Milton presses the button at the top of the stretch.

Johnstown was a stranger in Louisville on Derby eve compared to his status in Baltimore tonight. Not since War Admiral came up from the Derby to dominate his Preakness has there been anything to even approach the support being given Johnstown. He couldn't have more backers and well wishers if William Woodward, his owner, had promised $2 tickets to every Johnstown rooter.

This Preakness is the "race already run." Johnstown is the consensus of the consensus of consensuses, if you follow me. If you pick any other horse you pick your teeth in front of Emily Post. There are rumors that Johnstown will pull the track sprinkler and Jockey Jimmy Stout will swallow a gold fish at every pole to make the show interesting.

As the horses came out for the first race today, a visiting scribe, still celebrating the Derby, bellowed, "Track physician please report to the grandstand. There's a man who doesn't like Johnstown."

The Johnstown influence extends right down to the owners and trainers of his rivals. Lou Schaefer, trainer of Challedon, seemed to express the sentiment of the others by saying, "That $10,000 second money isn't tin."

Coal Parley Postpones Pact Signing

Conferees Adjourn Without Voting On 'Union Shop'

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 12.—The full Appalachian coal conference took no action in a 2-hour discussion tonight on an agreement reached today by its negotiators to grant the "union shop" to John L. Lewis' miners, and thus a final settlement of the controversy that has tied up the bituminous mines of 26 States was postponed until tomorrow at the earliest.

The conference—made up of 150 representatives of operators and an equal number of representatives of the union—ended without public expression from either side as to the prospects for tomorrow, but a high operators' spokesman said privately that it almost unquestionably would see the signing of a contract.

A union spokesman of equal authority put forward a similar view, with the statement that a general reopening of the mines by Monday seemed certain.

Southerners Yielding

Both described tonight's discussion as having cleared up questions as to the effect of the union shop upon management, and an operators' source commented further that it had been instrumental in dispelling at least some of the Southern hostility to granting that extension of power to Lewis.

The adjournment without a vote on the agreement drafted by the negotiators was moved by Charles O'Neill, a New York operator, but it was authoritatively said to have been motivated largely by a desire to let Southern groups have time for further full discussions among themselves.

It remained possible that some Southern operators would hold out to the end and withdraw from the conference rather than agree to the union shop—which was interpreted by James F. Dewey, a Federal

$5,000 in Jewels Stolen From Apartment Here

Theft of more than $5,000 worth of jewelry from a fashionable Connecticut avenue apartment house was reported to police last night.

Owner of the gems is Mrs. Grace E. Kriel, jr., of 3901 Connecticut avenue northwest, who discovered the jewels were missing at 2 p. m. Thursday, according to police, but did not report the loss until last night.

Among the 20 missing pieces of jewelry were a platinum dinner ring, set with two diamonds and a sapphire cluster, valued at $2,000.

5,500 Schoolboy Patrolmen Delighted by Parrots, Pups

(Pictures on Pages 12 and 17.)

With the watchword, "Even policemen have to take a holiday," more than 5,500 visiting miniature cops—members of school safety patrols—relaxed last night like tired businessmen to enjoy a show designed for their delight at Washington's Sylvan Theater.

Whipped into a frenzy of enthusiasm which no bald-headed row could ever reproduce, the youngsters, here from 19 States to take part today in their eighth annual parade, whooped and whistled their approval of trained dogs and birds, acrobats, musicians and trick bicycle riders.

The boys—and a few girls—were welcomed by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the D. C. Board of Education, and Inspector William E. Holmes, police traffic superintendent. Sergt. Joseph Harrington, of the Traffic Bureau, perennial marshal of the traffic patrols' marches, promised the best and finest parade ever for today, when 15,000 members of the patrols will begin their march down Constitution avenue at 8:30 a. m.

Climaxed by the appearance of the Altoona, Pa., traffic patrol boys' trombone choir, last night's program was the type which delights and edifies all policemen, young or old. Trained macaws and parrots rang bells, put out fires, waltzed and sassed their trainer; trained puppies did tricks no dog can do and strong

Poles Reject Russians' Bid to Pact

Fear 4-Power Move Might Be Seen as Encirclement by Nazi Neighbors

By the United Press.

Warsaw, May 12.—The Polish government tonight rejected Russia's proposal for a four-power pact of mutual assistance among Great Britain, France, the U. S. S. R. and Poland on the grounds that it might be interpreted as further "encirclement" of Germany.

"Poland is unwilling," a spokesman of the foreign office said, "to make any sort of a move which might be regarded as encirclement.

"Poland always desires to maintain good relations with her neighbors, that is to say, obviously, if the same desire exists among our neighbors."

Seek Peaceful Settlement

The statement was interpreted as indicating Poland is reluctant to destroy any chances that may exist for amicable settlement of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's demands for restoration of Danzig to the Reich and a Nazi route across the Polish corridor to East Prussia.

The government denied that either Italy or Japan had offered to mediate between Germany and Poland, as stated in some reports abroad.

The Soviet government's official organ, Izvestia, on Thursday proposed a four-power pact of mutual assistance to include Britain, France, Russia and Poland. Izvestia then proposed, alternatively, a three-power pact excluding Poland and framed "on the principle of reciprocity" which would extend the present Anglo-French military guarantees covering Rumania, Poland and Greece to the small Baltic nations along Russia's frontier.

A semiofficial statement tonight described as "especially gratifying to Poland" statements of the British and French premiers Thursday warning that a Nazi attack on Danzig would bring them into war on Poland's side.

Pilsudski Fete Canceled

Today was the fourth anniversary of the death of Marshal Josef Pilsudski, hero of the Polish republic, and police of Danzig banned a celebration there by the Polish minority because of fear of clashes. Polish residents had scheduled a rally at the Gedania sports field.

The Polish commissar-general in Danzig tonight protested to the police against the banning of the celebration.

Despite the ban, many Danzig Poles displayed the Polish colors with mourning garlands from housetops and windows.

Newspapers in Warsaw and other cities devoted their columns to black-bordered editorials, eulogizing Marshal Pilsudski who is said to have compelled Hitler, a year after the Nazi rise to power, to sign the 1934 Polish-German treaty of nonaggression by telling the Fuehrer bluntly: "Sign or fight."

"Poland today is as you, Marshal, wished—strong and unified in a determination to defend the nation," newspaper editorials said.

Doctor Plunges Injures 2 Others 6 Stories in Hotel,

A Columbia, S. C., physician fell from the sixth floor of the Continental Hotel last night and plunged through a kitchen skylight injuring two hotel employes.

Dr. Robert Lewis Daniel, the physician, was taken to Gallinger Hospital where his condition was said to be extremely critical. He was believed to have a skull fracture as well as numerous other injuries.

The injured employes were Jacob Cable, 32, of Rockville, Md., who was in serious condition, and William S. Johnson, colored, 38, of 553 Twenty-fourth street northeast, both cut by glass.

Officials of the hotel said Dr. Daniel fell about 8:30 p.m. The accident was reported to First Precinct police at 12:30 p. m. by Private A. R. Houch. Houch, police said, telephoned Mrs. Daniel at Columbia, and she left at once for Washington with Dr. Daniel's brother.

Turks Pledge Britain Aid in Mediterranean

Chamberlain Tells Commons Provisional Deal Is Concluded

By Ralph W. Barnes.
Special Cable to The Post.

London, May 12.—Turkey, once the "sick man of Europe" but now recovered and vigorous, joined today on a provisional basis, later to be made "definite", the "grand peace alliance" which is being erected by Great Britain and France to "stop" Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini.

This significant development marks the failure of the eleventh-hour efforts of the Fuehrer, acting through his pinch-hitting Ambassador, Franz von Papen, to reassert in Turkey that German ascendancy which brought the "Mistress of the Dardanelles" into the World War on the side of the central powers.

Enthusiastic cheers from all quarters of the House of Commons greeted Prime Minister Chamberlain as he announced:

"It is agreed that the two countries (Britain and Turkey) will conclude a definitive long-term agreement of reciprocal character in the interests of their national security.

"Pending the completion of a definite agreement, His Majesty's government and the Turkish government declare that in the event of an act of aggression leading to war in the Mediterranean area, they would be prepared to co-operate effectively and to lend each other all aid and assistance in their power."

Pope Seeks to Heal Nazi-Catholic Rift, Berlin Hears

Berlin, May 12 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII is urgently seeking to heal the rift between the Vatican and the Nazis, well-informed Catholics said tonight.

Despite the apparent failure of the Pope's effort to settle the Danzig question by five-power negotiations, German Catholic leaders said the Pope was determined to do his utmost to end the long quarrel.

According to these sources, one of the Pope's moves in this direction was to sever close relations with an adviser of many years' standing, Dr. Ludwig Kaas, former head of the German Center Party, who was forced to leave Germany in 1933 after Adolf Hitler's advent to power.

Nazis Outlawed By Argentina

Buenos Aires, May 12 (INS).—The Argentine government announced today a decree outlawing all foreign political organizations, including the Nazis, effective Monday.

Of all the major South American nations, Argentina has long enjoyed the best trade and diplomatic relations with Germany. This amity ceased recently when Argentina claimed to have uncovered a widespread Nazi plot to annex Patagonia.

Tension between the two countries has persisted since the so-called "Patagonian conspiracy" was unearthed.

Tax Revision Parley Called By President

Congress, Treasury Aides to Consider Slight Changes For This Session

By Cecil B. Dickson.
International News Service.

A new compromise plan for limited revision of business taxes at this session of Congress will be considered Monday at a White House conference called late yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Decision to hold the conference with Democratic leaders, Congressional and Treasury tax experts, came after the White House was informed conservatives in Congress have enough strength to force changes in the corporate revenue structure to aid business.

At his press conference earlier, Mr. Roosevelt went on record in favor of continuing the present corporate tax structure but said if there was no reduction in total Federal revenue he would not oppose changes by Congress.

Responsibility on Congress

Mr. Roosevelt was emphatic, however, in declaring the responsibility for changes would be on Congress. He insisted that if the undistributed profits tax is repealed, a way must be found to prevent investors in closely held corporations from legally evading high personal income taxes by keeping their earnings in the corporations while refusing to distribute dividends.

The tax conference will be held at the White House immediately after President Roosevelt meets with the "Big Four" of Congress—Vice President Garner, Speaker Bankhead, Senate Majority Leader Barkley and House Majority Leader Rayburn.

Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the Senat Finance Committee; Representative Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee; Secretary Morgenthau and Undersecretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes, all advocates of revision, will participate.

Tentative Compromises

The tentative compromise plan to be considered includes these points:

Substitution of a flat 18 per cent corporation tax for the present 16½ to 19 per cent undistributed profits tax on corporations earning more than $25,000 a year, and continuation of the present graduated 12½ to 16 per cent tax on corporations earning less than $25,000.

Repeal of the present provision limiting corporations' deductible losses to $2,000 a year to permit losses to be accounted for under capital gains and losses provisions.

Revision of the capital stock and excess profits levies to permit corporations to make declarations on the value of their stock each year, instead of every three years as presently provided by law.

A change to permit corporations to carry over their losses for three years for tax purposes instead of for only one year.

Efforts also are to be made to have Mr. Roosevelt agree to a reduction in the high surtax rates on individuals as a business incentive.

No General Overhaul Now

Whether the President will agree to the compromise plan has yet to be learned, but its sponsors pointed out that, with existing corporate levies, returning $1,300,000,000, expiring next December 31, the situation is more in the hands of Congress than in those of the Administration.

That there will be no general overhaul of the revenue structure this session is conceded now by even its proponents. They disclosed they would, if the compromise plan is adopted by the Administration, welcome a sweeping study of the entire tax structure in the recess of Congress by a special joint Congressional committee, as suggested by Barkley and Rayburn.

Merger No. 2 Made Effective By the Senate

No Action by House Will Be Needed on Reorganization Item

The President's second major reorganization plan, abolishing five agencies and regrouping 15 others in the regular departmental establishment, yesterday received Senate approval without a record vote and with virtually no debate.

Senate action assured operation of the plan, involving $1,250,000 in annual savings and affecting about 12,000 Federal employes. No House action is necessary under the one-chamber approval rule provided in the reorganization act.

Normally the plan would take effect July 8, 60 days after its submission to Congress, but Chairman Byrnes of the Senate Reorganization Committee announced last night he would introduce a joint resolution next Tuesday providing an earlier operation date.

Effective June 4

Operation of Plan No. 1, merging independent welfare, works and lending functions under three new agencies, and centralizing Budget Bureau functions under the White House, would be moved up in the same resolution. The House clinched approval of the first plan last week, and it normally would take effect June 24.

To avoid any hitch in speeding up operation of the plans, Senator Byrnes yesterday was in conference with Budget Director Smith, managing the President's reorganization studies, and Secretary of Interior

British and French bankers in particular were reported to have demanded that Franco's Nationalistic government in exchange for the loan give assurances that Spain would follow an independent and neutral foreign policy.

Senators Demand Navy Steer Away From Argentine Beef

By Felix Cotten.

Efforts to promote trade with Latin America to offset inroads of totalitarian nations were involved in a controversy yesterday between President Roosevelt and Congressmen from the cattle country over purchase by the navy of Argentine canned beef.

The result was that Western Senators began mobilizing to force passage of an amendment to the $773,000,000 Navy Department appropriation bill compelling the Navy to eat the American product exclusively.

The President at his press conference made public a letter he had written to Secretary of State Hull April 13 authorizing the Navy to buy 48,000 pounds of Argentine canned corned beef despite provisions of the "Buy American" act.

The reasons, he said, were threefold:

Argentine producers were the lowest bidders for the Navy contract. Moreover, their price of nearly 16 cents a pound, after the tariff of 6 cents a pound was deducted, was only 41 per cent of the lowest bid by any American producer—nearly 24 cents a pound.

The Argentine product was infinitely superior in quality to the American product.

The enlisted men of the Navy were entitled to food of the best quality.

Senate Votes Billion in Farm Loans And Grants

Overrides, 61-14, President's Warning It Shouldn't Go Beyond His Budget

By Robert C. Albright.

The largest farm bill in history, carrying nearly $1,000,000,000 out of an aggregate $1,218,666,000 for direct grants and loans to farmers, yesterday passed the Senate 61 to 14 over White House protests against unbudgeted increases.

The bill goes back to the House, where economy bloc leaders will move Monday to slash more than $376,000,000 in Senate increases above the budget.

Passage followed two futile efforts to knock out the $225,000,000 farm parity price increase and other Senate additions. Eight Republicans joined 49 Democrats, 2 Farmer-Laborites, 1 Progressive and 1 Independent in voting approval, while 11 Republicans and 3 Democrats voted "no."

Woodrum to Seek Cut

President Roosevelt and Secretary Morgenthau warned Congress it must provide new taxes to finance the unbudgeted increases, and Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, served notice of House efforts to restore the bill to the Administration's figure.

More than three-fourths of the bill's huge total is for benefits and loans to farmers.

Besides the regular $500,000,000 for soil conservation payments, the bill would provide $225,000,000 for parity price payments, based on 1909-1914 farm purchasing power; $50,000,000 for farm tenant act loans, $113,000,000 for surplus removal subsidies, $48,000,000 for farm sugar payments and $15,000,000 for seed loans.

La Follette Objects

Moving for reconsideration of the $338,000,000 added by the Senate to the House appropriations, Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, was blocked by a single objection from Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin.

Another effort, by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, to send the bill back to committee for removal of unbudgeted amounts was defeated, 42 to 28. Only 15 Democrats and 13 Republicans voted for the cut.

Bankhead Item Dropped

Reported from committee with a record-breaking total, the bill was further increased by $2,138,000 on the Senate floor.

Left out of the bill was specific provision for a cotton export subsidy program, the Senate having defeated the Bankhead amendment to move 7,250,000 bales of new-crop cotton abroad. But AAA officials said the department still has authority to aid foreign cotton shipments under the $113,000,000 surplus removal funds in the bill. Another $90,000,000 is available from customs receipts and 25 per cent of the total can be used for any commodity, with dairy products in particular scheduled for aid.

It was against the $225,000,000 for farm parity payments that the President's criticisms were particularly directed. Congress has failed to provide taxes to pay for this aid. Growers of corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco and rice would benefit from this item.

No Greater Drain

Other major sums in the bill are $191,000,000 for the Bureau of Public Roads, $22,990,000 for the Forest Service; $14,894,834 for the Extension Service; $7,181,570 for the Weather Bureau; $18,202,652 for the Bureau of Animal Husbandry; $721,405 for the Bureau of Dairy Industry; $5,282,344 for the Bureau of Plant Industry; $9,126,425 for the Bureau of Entomology and $4,653,691 for the Biological Survey.

Relief Alliance Denies Plan to Silence Moser

House Committee To Hear Tennessee Ex-Official Monday

An accusation that members of the Workers' Alliance had planned forcibly to prevent a Pennsylvania member of Congress from speaking at a cornerstone-laying ceremony was denied emphatically yesterday by a delegation of officials of the Berks County (Pa.) Alliance.

This and other charges against the relief workers' organization, made at hearings of the House committee investigating the WPA, were termed "malicious, false and unfounded" in a letter the Workers' Alliance officers sent Representative Taylor, of Colorado, chairman of the committee.

Meanwhile, the committee learned that Eugene R. Kuhne, former fish technician of the Tennessee Department of Conservation, will appear to testify Monday. Kuhne was dismissed from his post within 24 hours after the committee received his affidavit naming former Senator Berry and other prominent Tennessee politicians as beneficaries of WPA-constructed lakes.

May Hamper Inquiry

Committee members expressed fear Kuhne's dismissal as an employe who gave information to investigators would hamper the inquiry.

"We've already experienced considerable difficulty in getting information," said Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, acting chairman, "because so many people who have the facts are afraid to talk for fear of losing their jobs. This occurrence in Tennessee undoubtedly will increase our difficulties."

To Furnish List

Another development on the relief front came to light yesterday when Minority Leader Martin, of Massachusetts, told The Post that Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA Administrator, has promised to furnish the investigating committee with a list of all WPA officials receiving $100 or more per month, as of March 31. Martin said he understood information regarding salary increases by the WPA would be forthcoming later.

The minority leader added that Col. Harrington's action now made it unnecessary for him to press his resolution to force the WPA to give the salary information to the House.

Incensed by what they said was "irresponsible testimony," the Pennsylvania Workers Alliance officials rebuked the House committee for permitting itself "to be used as a forum for an attack upon the needy WPA workers and their organization."

Moser Restored Workers

The allegation that a proposal was made in a Reading alliance meeting to attack Representative Moser (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, if he should speak today at the cornerstone laying of the new Reading postoffice was denied, as were charges that alliance members had intimidated other workers.

"As a matter of fact," said the letter to Representative Taylor, "the resentment against the Workers Alliance has come from appointees of Congressman Miser who have been discharged for drunkenness, inefficiency, waste and misuse of Government property and funds."

When informed of this charge, Moser said he had not been responsible for appointment of a single WPA worker in his district, although, he added, "when a couple of the workers were fired from the rolls for voting for me, I made the authorities put them back."

Denies Threat to Boss

The Workers' Alliance delegation, which drove from Reading especially to deny the previous testimony, consisted of three WPA workers and two who were formerly on the rolls. All said they were registered Democrats.

George Marburger, chairman of the Reading Workers' Alliance, termed untrue a charge that union buttons were sold in working hours. Leonard B. Moser, one of the delegation, stated that no Workers' Alliance members were involved in an incident mentioned in an affidavit by Otto A. Nygaard, a project superintendent, who said he was threatened by Alliance members.

Close Vote Expected on Florida Canal

Pepper and Green See Victory; Opponents Say It Will Be Beaten

Florida ship canal backers in both Houses of Congress made confident predictions of victory yesterday as Senate debate on the measure began, with an extremely close vote expected not later than Wednesday.

Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, said he was certain of a "definite majority," while Representative Green (Democrat), of Florida, asserted, "We have plenty of votes to pass the bill in the House." Opponents of the canal, however, said it would be defeated in the Senate by a narrow margin.

Green, ranking member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, denied a report the canal bill would be offered as an amendment to a rivers and harbor bill scheduled to come up in the House Wednesday. He refused to say when the measure authorizing the $200,000,000 canal, already approved by his committee, will be considered in the House.

Senator Sheppard, of Texas, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and author of the bill permitting completion of the north Florida waterway, said that as a national defense measure alone the project was fully justified.

Indorses Six-Year Plan

He said his bill would not permit execution of President Roosevelt's proposal to spread construction work on the canal over 10 to 15 years in order to give a maximum of unemployment relief. The President began construction of the canal in 1935 when he allotted the project $5,400,000 of relief money. Early in the present session, Mr. Roosevelt asked Congress to authorize completion of the project.

Senator Sheppard said the bill indorsed construction plans of the Army Engineer Corps, which provide for finishing the canal in six years with skilled labor. Relief labor, engineers have said, would increase the cost by 25 per cent.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, leader of opposition to the canal, will take the floor Tuesday.

Senator Ellender Says Beauty Wins Over Brains in Seeking U. S. Jobs

By the Associated Press.

Senator Ellender (Democrat) of Louisiana, who has been making an official study of such things, said yesterday that when beauty and brains clash in competition over a Government job, beauty most frequently wins.

The shapely turn of an ankle, the Senator remarked, is often more effective in helping a girl to get a good job than is the skillful twist of the wrist that makes her rival a superlative stenographer.

Ellender began his inquiry several weeks ago. His problem, he said, is complicated by the fact that most Government officials are men. It is an everyday truism, he added, that men like pretty girls better than their unattractive sisters.

Representative Flannagan (Democrat), Virginia, said he "appreciated the offer" of M. G. Ely, Washington attorney, to suggest his name for appointment to the Western Virginia Federal District Court, but added:

"I wouldn't accept it on a silver platter. I like the job I've got too well."

Ely, a former Commonwealth's attroney of Lee County, Va., disclosed he already had approached Flannagan with an offer to recommend him for the appointment, but that Flannagan flatly rejected the proposal. For that reason, Ely said, he would pursue the matter no further.

The Monopoly Investigating Committee named James R. Brackett its executive secretary to succeed Leon Henderson, recently appointed to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Brackett has been public relations representative for the committee, having been lent by the SEC. Before becoming connected with the SEC he had been a writer for the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune and the Associated Press.

While Brackett will take over the Monopoly Committee's secretarial post, Henderson will continue to serve as economic adviser to the group. Brackett's salary will be $6,500 a year.

Superintendent C. R. Whitlock, of the Rosebud (S. Dak.) Indian Reservation, denied he had discriminated against Indians who failed to support the Wheeler-Howard reorganization act.

Whitlock also denied before the Senate Indian Affairs Committee charges made earlier by Steven Bravebird and Joe Thinelk, Sioux Indians who said Indians of the reservation were split into two groups because of the reorganization and who asked the tribe be exempted from provisions of the law.

Tom Whiting, who heads the organized Indians, also criticized indirectly operation of the act on the reservation. He said the Indians had been promised they were going to manage their own affairs and that he believed they could do so much better than they were now being operated by the Indian Bureau.

Justice Department Weighs Fight on Fine Against Union

U. S. Considers Appearing as Friend of Court In Apex Hosiery Case; Penalty Imposed For Loss of Business in Strike

The Justice Department is considering legal intervention which would aid a C. I. O. union fined almost $712,000 for treble the amount of damages inflicted in the Apex Hosiery Co. sit-down strike, it was learned yesterday.

The action would entail appearance by the department as friend of the court in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, which is to review the April 3 verdict of a Pennsylvania district court finding the American Federation of Hosiery Workers guilty of antitrust law violation in the 48-day strike which began May 6, 1937.

Although department attorneys are preparing a brief, it has not yet been decided whether it will be used in the Circuit Court or withheld until the case reaches the Supreme Court, where officials feel it is certain to arrive regardless of prior decisions.

Sit-Down Consideration

Chief factor in the department's hesitation, it is believed, is fear that any action will be interpreted as condoning sit-down strikes—a subject made doubly "touchy" by accusations that Attorney General Murphy approved the Detroit sit-down strikes in 1936.

Actually the brief will deal only with that phase of the decision of District Court Judge William H. Kirkpatrick which the department interprets as holding that even peaceful strikes in industries engaged in interstate commerce are violations of the Sherman antitrust act.

The brief contends that so long as a labor union acts in its recognized function of seeking to improve working conditions of its members, or in bargaining with an employer, it is exempt by the Clayton act from being considered a violator of the Sherman law, even though its actions, in striking and picketing, may "restrain" trade, in the literal sense.

Called "Middle of Road"

The brief was characterized as holding a "middle of the road position," broader than Judge Kirkpatrick's decision but in no way assuming a position announced by the C. I. O. Sunday, asking amendment of the anti-trust acts to exempt labor unions entirely.

The department will point out it has recognized that where a union steps outside its normal functions and becomes an agent to fix prices, threaten or intimidate rival concerns or engages in racketeering activities, and thus restrains trade, it is subject to antitrust law prosecution. Cases in point are the poultry, trucking, artichoke and building prosecutions in and around New York.

The hosiery workers union was fined $237,310 for its part in the Apex strike, the amount being automatically trebled under Sherman act provisions. The penalty was not only for damage inflicted to plant and machinery but for loss of business caused by the strike itself.

Senate Grants Farmers a Billion

of Georgia, argued that criticism is due to a misunderstanding that the Senate "is blindly making these increases." He said there was no greater drain on the Treasury than under last session's farm outlays.

"We have tried to use restraint," he said, "and at the same time deal fairly with agriculture. The bill does not place a staggering burden on the Treasury."

3 Democrats Vote No

Only Democrats voting against the bill on the final ballot were Burke, of Nebraska; Holt, of West Virginia and Walsh, Massachusetts. Republicans voting "no" were Barbour, New Jersey; Bridges, New Hampshire; Danaher, Connecticut; Gibson, Vermont; Hale, Maine; Johnson, California; Lodge, Massachusetts; Tobey, New Hampshire; Townsend, Delaware; Vandenberg, Michigan; White, Maine.

3 Democrats Join Knutson For War Poll

Sub-committee Hears Witnesses Support Referendum Plan

By the Associated Press.

A Senate judiciary subcommittee heard half a dozen witnesses urge yesterday that Congress submit to the States a Constitutional amendment requiring a popular vote before this country could enter any war on foreign soil.

Three Democratic House members joined Representative Knutson, Republican, Minnesota, in indorsing the proposal, which also was supported by Mrs. Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, New York columnist.

The latter, recalling that President Roosevelt opposed a similar war referendum proposal which was narrowly defeated in the House last year, asserted his opposition was inspired by fear that the Administration's foreign policies were not supported by a majority of the public.

Knutson Looks Back

Knutson, who voted against United States' entry into the World War, expressed the opinion this country would not have entered if there had been a vote of the people.

Representative Fulmer (Democrat), of South Carolina, said there was widespread fear the United States would become involved in war. Other Democrats supporting the proposal were Representatives Hill, of Washington, and O'Connor, of Montana.

The referendum proposal, introduced by a dozen Senators, would permit Congress to declare war—without a popular vote—in case of attack or threatened attack on the United States, its possessions or the Western Hemisphere.

Fish Not Hopeful

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, who supported the House resolution last year, said he was convinced that the proposal had slight chance for passage this session.

While the Judiciary Committee was proceeding with its hearings, the Senate Military Affairs Committee approved for the second time a bill to draft money in wartime.

Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, forced the committee to reconsider the measure, contending that fewer than a quorum, or one-third, of the 17 members of the committee were present last week when the committee gave it a unanimous indorsement.

With one Republican, Nye, of North Dakota, and a Farmer-Laborite, Lundeen, of Minnesota, ten Democratic members of the committee hastened to correct that situation yesterday.

Bridges was joined by Senator Gurney (Republican), of South Dakota, in voting against the measure, Bridges announcing he intended to file a minority report.

The measure, introduced by Lee, would require all citizens with net worth of more than $1,000 to share in the cost of war by investing fixed percentages of their wealth in 50-year Government bonds paying 1 per cent interest.

Letters Back Bill

Mirroring a tremendous upsurge throughout the country against involvement of this Nation in war, members of Congress have received more than 1,000,000 letters in the last 60 days from constituents demanding:

"Keep America out of war!"

Senators from more populous States revealed they have been deluged with letters urging rigid neutrality for this Nation. The ratio of letters from less populous areas was in proportion to population.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, has received more than 20,000, according to estimates of his office force. Every mail brings a fresh flood, it was revealed.

Speeches in the Senate by Senators Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, and Hiram Johnson (Republican), of California, drew to them many thousands of letters indorsing their vigorous opposition to entangling foreign alliances and involvement in a European war should it break out.

Warm praise was given to Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, in hundreds of letters for his vigorous stand in the Senate against taking part in a foreign war.

Clerks of Senator Walsh estimated he has received more than 18,000 "keep out of war" letters in the last 60 days. Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, has received 10,000 and 15,000.

Senate Committee Approves Rail Reorganization Court

Bill Is Second Designed to Help Industry; B. & O. President Pleads For Bill to Postpone Bankruptcy

Creation of a five-man reorganization court to supervise railroad bankruptcies and receiverships was approved yesterday by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee as the second of a series of measures designed to help the railroad industry.

A bill revising powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission was indorsed earlier in the week by the committee, while hearings were concluded yesterday on a third measure that would permit voluntary reorganization of railroads in temporary financial difficulties, without the necessity of bankruptcy proceedings.

Pleading with the committee to approve the latter proposal, Daniel Willard, 78-year-old president of the Baltimore & Ohio, said he would consider it a "personal disgrace" if his road should be forced into bankruptcy.

Would Allow Delay

The measure, which already has passed the House, would permit railroads to postpone their obligations with the consent of 75 per cent of creditors.

"If I felt that we were going to have a situation of 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 men unemployed for all time," said the white-haired head of the B. & O., "I would say 'put the road in bankruptcy'—and I could extend that statement to include certain other roads.

"But I don't believe that conditions today are any gauge for the future. I think we will come out of this depression the same as we did in 1881. I have been through the depressions of 1881, 1907, the war period of 1914 and depressions since then, and the railroads have always come out of them better off than they were before."

Hopeful for Business

Willard, who has guideed the destinies of the B. & O. for 30 years, claimed full responsibility "if the management of the property has been bad." He expressed "the utmost confidence" that his railroad would be able to pay its present fixed charges and resume dividends after a time "if business gets on a little better basis."

"I am certain," he declared, "that it will be on a better basis. This Nation is rich in every resource and it must be that we will go forward again. I haven't lost confidence in the United States."

Willard said the B. & O. had expended $600,000,000 in the last 30 years for equipment and acquisition of other roads in accord with the general plan of railroad consolidation approved by Congress.

The reorganization court bill which was approved by the committee yesterday would revise and expedite reorganization procedure. It provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in determining the maximum capitalization of a reorganized road, limit the estimate for anticipated future earnings to the average for the 12-year period prior to reorganization.

Unemployment Problem Crops Up At Greenbelt

Greenbelt, Md., has, of all things, an unemployment problem.

The Federal Government's "model" town has had 10 cases of unemployment in the past six months, according to figures of the General Welfare Committee appointed by the Citizens Association to deal with such emergencies. The town has a population of 885 families.

When one of the residents loses his job, the welfare committee tries to get him an entree somewhere, usually in the Government service, where 72 per cent of the Greenbelt dwellers are employed.

State and county employment is virtually denied to most of the residents because they are not citizens of the State. Most of them maintain their vote and residence in other States, from which they were appointed to the Government service in Washington under New Deal job quotas.

AFL to Renew Peace Talks With CIO

Green 'Reluctant' To Believe They Can End Quarrel

By the United Press.

The American Federation of Labor executive council last night authorized its peace committee to continue negotiations with the Congress of Industrial Organizations and A. F. L. President Green reiterated his plea that C. I. O. unions return "home."

Green said he did not know when the peace negotiations, inspired by President Roosevelt, would be resumed.

They have been in recess since April 4 because President Lewis, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, was tied up with bituminous contract negotiations.

Hearings on Wagner act amendments before the Senate Education and Labor Committee also delayed the peace parleys.

Green said his plea to return to the A. F. L. applied to all C. I. O unions, including Lewis' own United Mine Workers of America.

In the U. M. W. case, he added, however, that differences with the Progressive Mine Workers of America, a rebel offshoot of the U. M. W., would have to be composed before they could be readmitted.

"Do you honestly think that there is any chance of reaching a peace agreement with the C. I. O.?" Green was asked.

"I'm reluctant to express an opinion on that question," he replied. "It might not rest on a sound basis.

"But I can say this, if in the meantime any of the national unions which formed the C. I. O. desire to come back just as they left, there will be no question about it. They would be welcomed and they could take their place."

"At one time," Green continued, "there seemed to be a general desire within both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. for a fair settlement of the difficulties. I hope that feeling still prevails.

"It is possible that it might be modified insofar as the leaders are concerned, at least by the arguments and the heated statements issued concerning Wagner act amendments. The C. I. O., of course, opposes any change, whereas the A. F. of L. is contending vigorously for amendments."

He announced that the Pan-American Federation of Labor executive council would meet here Tuesday. It will discuss reviving this organization, which has not been active for several years. Members of the council are Green, A. F. of L. Vice President Matthew Woll, Puerto Rican Resident Commissioner Santiago Iglesias, and President Louis Morones of Confederacion Regionale Obrera Mexicana, Mexico labor organization.

Naval Training At 2 Va. Colleges May Be Started

By the Associated Press.

Representative Drewry (Democrat), Virginia, ranking majority member of the House Naval Affairs Committee, suggested to the heads of two Virginia educational institutions yesterday the possibility of establishing a Naval Reserve officers' training corps unit at a Virginia school.

In identical letters to Dr. J. L. Newcomb, president of the University of Virginia, and Dr. John Stewart Bryan, president of the College of William and Mary, Drewry explained plans of the Navy Department to set up two new units at schools yet to be selected, and invited their ideas on seeking a unit for their institutions.

The Navy appropriation bill now before Congress, he said, carried funds for two units in addition to eight already established.

Working Hours For Minors Set Under U. S. Act

By the Associated Press.

Miss Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, announced yesterday conditions under which employment of minors between 14 and 16 years of age shall not be considered oppressive child labor under the Fair Labor Standards Act. They are effective May 24.

The regulations provide:

Such minors may be employed not more than three hours a day or more than 18 hours a week in school terms; at other times they may be employed not more than eight hours a day or more than 40 hours a week.

Such employment must be between 7 a. m., and 7 p. m., except in distribution of newspapers.

Newsboys may be employed from 6 a. m. to 7 p. m., with the evening limitation extended to 8 p. m. from April 1 to September 30.

During school sessions, however, the regulations provide that:

"No minor shall be employed in distribution of newspapers both before and after noon of any day when school is in session, except between the hours of 7 a. m., and 7 p. m."

200 Greenbelters Hear Dr. Frickey

Chile has the highest birthrate of any country in the world, yet has been able to reduce the child mortality rate from 162 to 87 per thousand in the past few years, Dr. Gustavo Frickey, a special commissioner of the Chilean government, last night told an audience of 200 at the Greenbelt (Md.) School.

Dr. Frickey said Chile had established more than 300 children's clinics and was operating a series of small, two-room clinics which could be moved from place to place as necessity arose.

Police Grill Politician in Murder Ring

Said to Have Aided Insurance Killers After Threats

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, May 12.—Evidence that the mass murder syndicate forced politicians to furnish the names of prospective victims was disclosed tonight when a Democratic committeeman was taken into custody.

The committeeman, Paul Peppe, obtained at least 11 prospects for the ring, Capt. James Kelly, of the homicide squad, charged.

Peppe, according to Kelly, acted as errand boy for Paul Petrillo, South Philadelphia "witch doctor" who operated a tailor shop as a sideline to his arsenic ring activities.

Peppe, Kelly said, met Petrillo when he went to his shop to have a suit made. Petrillo asked him to obtain insurance prospects for the ring, but the politician refused, Kelly added.

"Your sisters may die if you don't," Petrillo reportedly told Peppe. "I'll put the 'evil eye' on them."

Peppe then began supplying the ring with the names of prospective victims and in return for that information Petrillo went to the committeeman's home to help Peppe's sisters recover from a slight illness, Kelly said.

Twenty-fifth Arrested

Peppe was ordered held for investigation although no formal charges were placed against him. He was the twenty-fifth person arrested in connection with the vast machinations of the merchants of death.

Shortly afterward, Mrs. Joseph Gagliradi, 60, was brought to police headquarters for questioning. Detective Sergeant Samuel Riccardi identified her as a fortune teller. Several additional arrests were predicted during the night.

Earlier, the "Kiss of Death" woman's stepmother tried to end her shame by suicide in another tragedy of the syndicate while investigators turned up more evidence that the tentacles of the killer band reached poisonously into other States.

Shortly after detectives attributed to the syndicate nine urders in New York City and vicinity, Mrs. Angelina Ruggerio swallowed poison in her Hammonton, N. J., home out of humiliation for her remote connection with the gruesome affair. Her stepdaughter is the widely sought Mrs. Rose Carina, three of whose five husbands are dead. The other two refused to take out insurance.

G-Men Not Called In

This afternoon doctors of West Jersey Homeopathic Hospital said they had been able to revive Mrs. Ruggerio and that her condition was "fair."

Reports from Washington that G-men might enter the investigation, if invited, were received coldly tonight by investigators who think they have done well enough in exposing the heinous work of American criminal history's most ruthless killer band.

Director J. Edgar Hoover of the Federal Bureau of Investigation said no request for FBI co-operation had been received.

"If such a request should be made," he said, "it will be given consideration and if it is found that the FBI has jurisdiction all the facilities of the bureau will be made available."

Prosecutor Satisfied

District Attorney Charles F. Kelley said he would "welcome with open arms" the facilities of the FBI, adding that he was satisfied with the progress made by his own detectives.

Three druggists were brought to city hall late today for questioning because their names were found in records seized in a raid on the office of Dr. Horace D. Perlman, physician held not only as a dispenser of arsenic to the syndicate but charged with furnishing names of prospective victims to the death merchants. He is said to have implicated at least one other physician.

Evidence of nine newly discovered syndicate murders in Jersey City, N. J., and the boroughs of Manhattan and Brooklyn, N. Y., was turned over to authorities in those cities, according to a detective who said Philadelphia police were too busy pursuing the maze of local crime to attempt more than perfunctory treatment of deaths in other cities.

Twenty-four persons now are under arrest in the case and police disclosed that another suspect barely escaped their net today after an all-night vigil about a Philadelphia home. He was Dominic Rodeo, mentioned in the case for the first time yesterday when his name entered investigation of the drowning of Joseph Arena.

Rodeo was said to have shared in Arena's insurance and to have been aboard the fishing boat from which Arena was pushed into the ocean off Sea Isle City, N. J.

Passports of Bund Leader And 2 Associates Withheld

Sailing Papers Held Up After New York Mayor Indicates Possible Inquiry Into Activities of the Trio

By the Associated Press.

Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, has been blocked temporarily in an effort to obtain a passport from the State Department.

Authoritative sources disclosed yesterday that applications for passports for Kuhn and two associates, Fritz Schfiering and Gerhard Wilhelm Kunz, were filed some weeks ago but were held up at the time and would be held up pending completion of an investigation into the Bund's affairs by William B. Herlands, commissioner of investigation of New York City.

Mayor La Guardia, of New York, sent a telegraphic request to the State Department yesterday asking that the passports be not granted until the inquiry is over.

The Bund, frequently criticized as pro-Nazi, has been the center of furious controversy in and out of Congress. In New York yesterday Kuhn began suit for $5,000,000 against Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and others on the ground he was libeled in the motion picture "Confessions of a Nazi Spy." He said the Bund was a "patriotic, loyal and American organization."

Kuhn and the two associates whose passports are being held up are American citizens. Officials here did not disclose to what foreign country they wished to travel.

Explaining the action in holding up the papers, an official declared that whenever the department is cognizant of an investigation by municipal or State authorities, the granting of passports is delayed for a reasonable time.

Dewey Probing Bund

New York, May 12 (INS).—While Fritz Kuhn and other leaders of the German-American Bund today were engaged in passport difficulties and filing libel actions, District Attorney Thomas Dewey's office began to take a deep interest in bund finances.

At present, one branch of the Federal Government and two branches of the city government are probing the bund.

Two days ago, Dewey revealed he had subpenaed records in an investigation of "certain alleged grand larcenies in substantial amounts."

The Dewey office announced its interest after Kuhn charged its agents had broken into his office and taken $1,380 while he was in California. A newspaper picture taken of Kuhn and a blonde at the fair showed he was in New York at the time.

The municipal department of investigation has been holding hearings on the bund's reported failure to pay taxes, chiefly on tickets sold for its meeting at Madison Square Garden two months ago.

Droiwsy Driver Is Reckless, Judge Decides

When a man drives an automobile while drowsy he is guilty of reckless driving, Traffic Court Judge Edward M. Curran ruled yesterday.

The judge reached his decision in denying a motion for a new trial in the case of Charles Wiggins, 20, who was convicted of driving recklessly in connection with an accident. His defense was that he dropped off to sleep for an instant before the collision, April 29.

Wiggins, attorney had contended that falling asleep was an involuntary action and could not be construed as recklessness.

'Hitler Is Such a Human Person,' Says U. S. Dancer He Admires

'Almost Thinks She Loves' Him, London Paper Reports

By the International News Service

London (Saturday), May 13.—Nineteen-year-old Miriam Verne, Pittsburgh dancer starring in the operetta, "The Merry Widow," at Munich, "almost thinks she loves" Chancellor Hitler, the London Daily Sketch said today.

According to the paper, Miss Verne "confessed" as much in a London-Munich telephone interview. She has performed before the Reichsfuehrer and high Nazi officials on numerous occasions.

Before going to Munich, the young Pennsylvania girl had a featured role in "Melody of the Night" at Berlin's Metropole Theater. Hitler, after witnessing several performances, helped her obtain a contract to appear in "The Merry Widow" in Munich and told her that her dancing was "simply wonderful."

Since then, according to the interview, her affection for the Fuehrer has increased rapidly.

The Sketch quoted Miss Verne as saying:

"Hitler is such a great man that I was frightened when we first met, but now I almost feel that I'm—no, he's such an important man I should not say it at all.

"I am only an artist. He is so great and I admire him tremendously. I wouldn't dare say more."

Miss Verne, said the Sketch, was even more shy about discussing Hitler's feelings for her. Queried on this point, she told the Sketch:

"What a question! He does me honor. He admires my dancing. . . .

"He saw me dancing in Berlin, sent for me and asked if I didn't think it would be a good idea to come to the Munich Theater. I was most delighted."

Miss Verne added, the Sketch said, that despite his campaign against women using cosmetics, Hitler never objected to her use of them.

"He always complimented me on my appearance," she said, revealing that she has learned to speak German since she met the Fuehrer last September.

"To me Hitler is such a natural, human person. Before, I was always interested solely in my work—but now . . ."

Ex-Farm Hand Is Master Strike-Fixer

Dr. Steelman, Who Settled Coal Walkout, Holds Five Degrees

A doctor of philosophy who once was a boxcar-riding harvest hand, a former economics and sociology professor who was a logger in a cypress swamp, is the man instrumental in settling the Nation-wide coal strike in New York yesterday.

He is John R. Steelman, director of the U. S. Conciliation Service, born in Arkansas 39 years ago. He earned his way while attending five colleges, holds a degree in social ethics from a theology school and earned $9 a day running a threshing machine in the Oregon wheat lands, where, incidentally, vigilantes once roused him out of bed and charged him with sabotaging the harvest.

The Government's ace fixer-upper of labor disputes has settled strikes in almost every State, not to mention Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. His most recent job before the coal negotiations was terminating Washington's hotel strike in March.

Joined Staff in 1933

When he joined the Conciliation Service in 1933, his first job plunged him into 13 strikes in the logging industry of West Virginia. Thirteen settlements followed almost immediately. Since then he has settled a shrimp fishers strike on the West Coast, saved a $3,000,000 onion crop jeopardized by Mexican workers in Laredo, Tex., and was instrumental in ending the 1935 Alabama coal strike and the 1936-1937 general strike in San Francisco. He is credited with forestalling a threatened Akron rubber workers strike just a year ago, when he talked operators out of a prospective wage cut and a move to make Akron a "ghost town" by decentralizing the great tire and rubber plants to other areas.

It was the convincing oratory of Labor Secretary Perkins which brought Steelman to the Federal service. A teacher of economics at the Alabama State Girls School, he heard Miss Perkins deliver a commencement address in 1933. A few weeks later he came to Washington on her staff. In June, 1937, he was appointed director of the Conciliation Service on the death of Hugh L. Kerwin.

In Army During War

Previously, after completing high school in time to join the Army during the war, he worked in the Arkansas cypress swamps to earn enough money to go to college. He earned his expenses until he graduated from Henderson-Brown College in Arkansas, then got a scholarship to Vanderbilt University and made further studies at Peabody College, in Nashville, Tenn. He got his master's degree from Vanderbilt, then a fellowship at Harvard, then a scholarship at North Carolina, where he completed his doctor's degree.

At present, Steelman's job is largely surpervising the activities of his 56 conciliators. But when the problems get too tough, he takes a hand himself. His colleagues attribute his success to the fact that he can speak the workers' language.

Police Seek Man Who Tried Attack In Gage School

A young colored man who lurked in the wash room of Gage School to attempt criminal assault on an 8-year-old girl was sought last night by police.

The child, a third grade pupil, told police the man seized her when she entered the washroom. Her terrified screams brought Mrs. Juliett E. Dyer, a teacher, who also screamed when she saw the man. He fled.

Mrs. Dyer said he broke from the room and dashed across the playground crowded with hundreds of children during the lunch recess hour. The little girl was uninjured.

Coal Pact Provides For 'Union Shop'

mediator, as meaning that all miners affected who were not members of the United Mine Workers would be required to join after a stipulated period.

Vote Under Unit Rule

The conference, a 6-year-old organization which is the largest two-sided collective bargaining agency in the country, votes under the unit rule. That means its contract decisions must have a unanimous vote—but only of those voting. In the past irreconcilable opponents to some contract provisions sometimes have refrained from voting.

Specifically, the conference acts only for the eight-State Appalachian area, but since that section produces 70 per cent of the country's bituminous, its labor decisions usually substantially control in the rest of the belt.

This time, contrary to usual practice, individual settlements had been under way since yesterday in bituminous areas outlying the Appalachian, under Lewis' authority and at what almost amounted to the command of Federal mediators.

Two lines in the proposed new contract thus described it:

"It is agreed that the United Mine Workers of America is recognized herein as the exclusive bargaining agency representing the employes of the parties of the first part. It is agreed that as a condition of employment all employes shall be members of the United Mine Workers of America, except those exempt classifications of employment as provided in the contract."

Thinking of A. F. L.

Lewis had fought insistently for this upon the contention that it was necessary to protect his union from membership "raids" by rivals. He did not mention the rival A. F. L.'s Progressive Miners Union, but apparently had it in mind.

No change in pay—a basic $5.60 a day in the South and $6 in the North—was made in the agreement. Neither was the old 5-day, 35-hour week altered.

The Appalachian area shutdown began April 1, involving 340,000 men, and progressively miners in outlying areas laid down their picks until altogether 460,000 were idle.

A growing coal shortage hampered industry in many sections, and in some threatened hospitals and public institutions. The Roosevelt Administration entered the dispute early, first through the mediation efforts of James F. Dewey and Dr. John R. Steelman and subsequently through powerful pressure for an agreement directly applied by Secretary Perkins and then by the President himself.

The President's demand for a settlement by Wednesday night was not met, but it was because of that failure that Steelman yesterday asked Lewis to make individual contracts outside the Appalachian wherever he could. This Lewis set out immediately to do with those operators willing to grant the union shop.

'In Last Spasm'

As the afternoon wore on and caucus followed caucuss among various of the operators, Lewis commented:

"Things are in their last spasm."

In New York City, the transit commission prepared to order resumption of full subway service—which had been curtailed for some days—as soon as formal assurances were received that coal shipments were on the way.

The New York State public service commission postponed indefinitely its inquiry into the supplies of fuel available to public utilities, which had been started to lay a legal basis for a possible order reducing gas and light service to consumers. Installation of oil-burning equipment also had been considered.

Contract Extended

Meanwhile, anthracite operators and the U. M. W., holding concurrent negotiations here for a new agreement covering some 100,000 miners in that industry, made a third seven-day extension of the old contract—this time to May 20. Thus, continued hard coal production for at least that long was assured.

An illustration of the marked Southern reluctance to accept the union shop was furnished by a disclosure that the operators' side of the negotiating committee was able to reach the 100 per cent affirmative vote which is essential to the unit rule principle only because L. C. Gunter of Knoxville, Tenn., did not vote.

An effort at placation in this connection was made through a formal declaration by Lewis that the union specifically promised not to interfere with ordinary managerial functions.

Merger Bill No. 2 Passed by Senate

Not Decided On Date

Byrnes said he wanted to make certain Ickes was prepared to complete the work preparatory to fixing minimum prices for soft coal, begun, but unfinished by the abolished commission. He said he had reached no conclusion on the date for operation of the plans he will fix in his joint resolution.

To clinch approval of plan No. 2, the Senate Reorganization chairman had himself sponsored a resolution of disapproval—the only means whereby the issue could be moved to a vote. At Byrnes' request, the Senate in five minutes defeated the resolution, without a single "yes" vote, thereby assuring approval of the plan.

The brief debate was entirely facetious. Byrnes was twitted goodhumoredly by Senate Minority Leader McNary for sponsoring a resolution he was against. As Byrnes remarked that McNary cast the sole vote for the resolution in committee, McNary said he "merely supported the resolution introduced by the chairman."

Eyes Dry Over Commission

"And I suspected right then there was something wrong with it, and voted against it," laughed Byrnes.

"Were any tears shed over demise of the coal commission?" asked Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia.

"I neither saw nor heard any," replied Byrnes.

Without further talk, the resolution was put to a voice vote and the second plan loudly approved.

NEC Activities Shifted

Along with the Bituminous Coal Commission, the second plan wipes out of existence the National Emergency Council, the Codification Board, the War Finance Corporation and the Office of Director General of Railroads. Main Emergency Council functions go to the White House, but the NEC's film and radio activities shift to the new Federal Security Administration.

Other salient features of plan No. 2:

Merges foreign service officers of State, Commerce and Agriculture departments in a single foreign service in the State Department.

Shifts the Rural Electrification Administration to the Agriculture Department.

Lighthouse Consolidation

Consolidates the Commerce Department's Bureau of Lighthouses under the Coast Guard in the Treasury.

Puts the Inland Waterways Corporation under the Commerce Department.

Orders the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission to the Interior Department.

Transfers Federal Prison Industries, Inc., and the National Training School for Boys to the Justice Department, abolishing the board of trustees of the training school.

Third Plan Forming

The President has announced he will send no further reorganization plans to Congress this session. A third plan, dealing with shifts within departments, will be offered next session, together with orders regrouping public land functions and transferring alien deportation functions from the Labor to the Justice Department.

Only one possible source of controversy remains in the initial two plans—the President's choice of administrators to head the new Federal Security, Federal Works and Federal Loan agencies created in Plan No 1. The Senate must confirm these appointments.

Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Charles W. Brown, president of the Western Maryland Railroad; W. Averill Harriman, chairman; William Jeffers, president, and Frank Robinson, vice president, respectively, of the Union Pacific.

Leahy Slated To Govern Puerto Rico

Roosevelt Announces He'll Appoint Naval Chief for Island

President Roosevelt yesterday announced his intention of appointing Admiral William D. Leahy, retiring chief of naval operations, as Governor of Puerto Rico, key point in the defenses of the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico.

The President told his press conference he had selected Leahy to succeed Governor Blanton Winship some time this summer. Winship, a retired Army major general, is nearing 70.

Besides taking charge of the troubled economic conditions, Leahy is expected to oversee plans to make the island an impregnable stronghold. Construction of major Army and Navy air bases will be started there within the next year and officers consider that ultimately the island will be made into a second Hawaii.

Importance of the heavily-populated island as a defense point was recognized recently when a new military department was set up in the Caribbean with headquarters in its principal city, San Juan. A strong base on the island, strategists declare, can prevent a warlike move against the Panama Canal, South America or the southern part of the United States.

Admiral Leahy already has reached the Navy retirement age, 64, but is remaining in his post until Congress adjourns. He probably will relieve Winship about August 1. He will be the first naval officer to head either the Puerto Rican or Philippine governments, although retired Army officers have headed each.

Gov. Winship twice has been the target of assassins of the island's Nacionalista Party since he took office in 1934. He has wanted to resign for some time but has said he would not "quit under fire."

San Juan, P. R., May 12 (U.P.).—Gov. Blanton Winship today said Puerto Rico was "damned lucky" to get Admiral William D. Leahy, whom President Roosevelt revealed he soon would nominate as Governor of this island.

At his press conference an hour after the news reached here and while newsboys on the street shouted, "Winship kicked out!" the Governor said:

"I think you're all damned lucky to get Admiral Leahy. He is one of the world's outstanding Navy men and a fine administrator."

Gov. Winship said he had talked over matters with President Roosevelt on his recent trip to Washington and had told the Chief Executive he "wanted to go" when the time was appropriate.

Asked whether he would remain in San Juan until Admiral Leahy arrives—probably about the end of summer—Gov. Winship replied he would do as the President wished. He said his own present plans were to return to his Georgia home and "my old friends."

The Governor revealed no bitterness over the President's action in announcing his replacement, and said he would "always be ready" to serve Puerto Rico.

"Perhaps I can do more there than here," he said.

The Governor's friends, however, criticized the President's "brusque" announcement, and said it would give Winship's enemies a "chance to crow." They contended the Governor should have been permitted to announce his own resignation.

Forest Fires Rage In New England; Peril Increasing

Boston, May 12 (U.P.).—Fires raged through timber lands of New Hampshire and Rhode Island tonight as volunteers sought to check one that threatened the outskirts of Nashua, N. H.

Thousands of acres of valuable timber have been destroyed by sporadic fires throughout New England in the past 24 hours and authorities warned the danger was increasing.

Nearly 500 men, including CCC enrollees, were fighting a mile-wide fire moving easterly toward Nashua from Blood's Crossing before a strong northwest wind.

Dean Powell Refuses Louisiana Bishopric To Continue Preacher College Work Here

Believes It His Duty To Finish Task At Cathedral

By Robert Tate Allan.

The Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of the Washington Cathedral, announced last night that he had declined acceptance of the bishopric of the Diocese of Louisiana in order to complete his original task of expanding the program of the College of Preachers, of which he is warden.

"I came here two years ago with a definite program in mind and I must finish it," he told The Post in an exclusive interview, "and it would not be fair to the cathedral, to the college or to the Diocese of Louisiana to leave this job incomplete."

Declination of the position to which he was elected on April 12 is made difficult, he stressed, by the fact that there is a great opportunity for mission and pastoral work in Louisiana, and that he, himself, is a son of the South, having been born in Alabama, where he received his early education.

Had he accepted, Dean Powell would have been spiritual leader over a group of 13,000 communicants.

Associated with the college as student, adviser and teacher for 12 years, Dr. Powell was a member of the first conference of the college which assembled in June, 1925, four years before the new building was ready for use. He was a member of the Council of Advice to Bishop Rhinelander, first warden of the college.

Establishment of closer relationship between the College of Preachers and the Cathedral and between the Cathedral and the Diocese of Washington has been one of the aims of Dean Powell, who characterized the Cathedral as "the greatest missionary center in America," pointing out the great cross-section of people worshiping daily there.

Discussing future plans for the College of Preachers, he said that "we are looking forward to having students remain here for a longer period in order to go more thoroughly into discussions."

At present, he said, some 300 clergymen come to the college annually for post graduate study, without tuition charge and only a nominal fee for board. Coming from all parts of America they attend for periods ranging from several weeks to a year.

In the 18 years since his ordination, Dean Powell has served successively as a chaplain of Episcopal students at the University of Virginia, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church there, and as pastor of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore. He was graduated from the University of Virginia in 1917 and from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1920.

He is the second Episcopal ecclesiastic in recent months to decline a prelate's position. Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's, historic "Church of the Presidents," turned down the bishopric of the Diocese of Delaware last October 3.

Married, Dean Powell has two sons, Phillip, 9, and "Tommy," 6, both student at Beauvior School, preparatory school for St. Alban's and the Cathedral School for Girls. Dean Powell is 47.

Autoist Escapes As Train Drags Car 60 Feet

Md. Man Receives Only Cuts at B. & O. Bladensburg Crossing

Royal F. Crofton, 44, of East Riverdale, nearly lost his life yesterday on the B. & O. grade crossing at Bladensburg, where a Prince Georges County rescue squad member was killed less than a year ago.

Crofton escaped death by a split second when a freight train struck the rear of his car and dragged it 60 feet along the tracks. The Bladensburg rescue squad took him to Casualty hospital, where he was said to be suffering from head injuries and lacerations. His condition was reported fair.

George Edwards, 48, colored watchman, was struck by flying debris and was treated by a private physician. Crofton, an employe of a Bladensburg garage, was on his way to work when the accident occurred.

Two children and a traffic policeman were injured here in traffic accidents yesterday.

Private Harry E. Johannsen, 26, of 2309 Fifteenth street northwest, attached to the Traffic Division, was struck by a streetcar while directing traffic at Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Witnesses said he stepped backward into the side of a streamlined car operated, police said, by James Insley, 52, of 203 Third street southeast.

Johannsen was taken to Emergency Hospital with severe head lacerations.

Francis Stello, 9-year-old son of Policeman Charles Stello, Second Precinct, was knocked down by an automobile while playing in front of his home, 2220 First street northwest. He was treated for minor head cuts at Sibley Hospital.

Also treated at Sibley Hospital was Louis Calomeris, 14, of 107 E street northwest. He sustained abrasions and bruises to his legs when he was knocked from his bicycle on Fourteenth street northwest.

Argentine Beef Stirs Controversy

greeted the announcement in Congress, however, Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, charged that the Argentine producers had the benefit of a Government subsidy.

The Argentine Meat Producers' Co-operative, successful bidder for the Navy contract, he asserted, "if I am corectly informed, is actually a Government institution."

Because of this, he felt that the amendment to force the Navy to eat American beef, already incorporated in the supply bill in the House, was fully justified. The amendment is sponsored by Senator O'Mahoney and Representative Scrugham (Democrat), of Nevada.

President Insists

The President, it is understood, is insisting that the amendment be eliminated in the Senate. As a result, a fight over the matter is in prospect. The Navy supply bill now is before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

What particularly angered cattle country Senators was the President's remark that apparently American cows did not make as good canned corned beef as some foreign cows (meaning those of Argentina).

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, said "I cannot understand the President making such a statement. The quality of American beef unquestionably is unsurpassed. Argentine canned beef on Kansas grocery store shelves is causing enough trouble as it is."

Other Senators remarked that there were no better looking cattle in the world than the Herefords of the plains.

Investigation, however, revealed there was a definite reason for the superiority of Argentine canned corned beef. It is that Argentine packers can choice cuts while American packers can only the "leavings."

The President, in his letter, revealed that Hull had urged him to authorize acceptance of the Argentine bid. This recalled that the individualistic Argentine, which leans to the cynical side in foreign relations, has been a kind of trouble center in Hull's efforts to strengthen trade and political ties with Latin America.

Retaliation Charged

One Democratic Senator ventured the opinion that the President, in approving the Argentine bid, did so because of failure of the Senate to ratify the Argentine sanitary convention, which would permit imports of fresh Argentine beef into this country for areas free of the hoof and mouth disease.

Because of the alleged prevalence of hoof-and-mouth disease in some parts of Argentina, fresh beef from that country is barred. The President remarked, however, that the hoof-and-mouth disease could not be imported in canned corned beef.

Argentina a few months ago retaliated for the ban which members of Congress from the cattle country put over by slashing imports from the United States by 40 per cent. The reason, Argentina said, was that it could not sell enough goods to the United States and had to cut purchases to conform to sales.

The President did not believe, in view of the circumstances cited by him, that acceptance by the Navy of the Argentine bid would be in violation of the "Buy American" act, which confines Government purchases for the most part to American products.

Senator Adams Objects

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, said it was "particularly objectionable that the American Navy should be made to fight on Argentine beef."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, pointed out that the Government forced concerns supplying goods to conform to certain labor standards under the Walsh-Healy act. In view of this, he commented, it ought to buy American goods unless there was a vast margin of difference in price and quality.

Representative Horton (Republican), Wyoming, said:

"Why the President should use his office as a sounding board to boost foreign products is inconceivable to me."

The Argentine Embassy, meanwhile denied that the Argentine Meat Producers Co-operative was paid a subsidy, or that it was connected with the Argentine government in any way. As proof of this, embassy officials said an American company which has an establishment in the Argentine submitted a bid of 16½ cents, or only four-fifths of a cent more than the co-operatives. This company, officials declared, also was one of the bidders offering to supply American beef at much higher prices.

Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, received a cablegram from the United States Chamber of Commerce at Buenos Aires urging that the amendment to force the Navy to eat American beef be eliminated from the supply bill. The amendment, the chamber said, will cause "further resentment and additional obstacles to Argentine-American trade relations, already in a very unsatisfactory state, besides mitigating the effects of the good neighbor policy." Walsh said he would sent the cable to the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Argentina Pleased

Buenos Aires, May 12 (AP).—Foreign Minister Cantilo said tonight President Roosevelt's order for the United States Navy to buy Argentine beef was "a fine gesture" which "may become an important precedent in friendly relations between the two countries."

His evident pleasure at the action was reflected even among the most severe critics of Washington's ban on imports of Argentine chilled beef on grounds that it is produced in a country where hoof and mouth disease is prevalent.

"In buying our canned beef, no matter how small a quantity, Americans are paving the way for improvement in our trade relations," said an official of foreign ministry.

"For that reason we applaud Mr. Roosevelt's gesture and hope for further favorable action which may erase the bad impression caused by the ban which would not permit us to offer our steaks in the Argentine pavilion at the New York World's Fair."

Pending a trade treaty, Argentina has restricted imports from the United States through heavy penalizing measures which at present are threatening to eliminate entirely imports of North American automobiles and trucks.

Cattlemen Protest

El Paso, Tex., May 12 (AP).—Southwestern cattlemen and packing house officials today protested President Roosevelt's assertion in Washington that he favored Argentine canned beef for the Navy because it was cheaper and better than the American product.

"I cannot believe that Mr. Roosevelt made such a statement," said Paul Thomas, vice president of a large packing company. "I thought we had enough experience during the Spanish-American War with imported canned beef to discredit it with the Army and Navy."

Chamber of Commerce officials sought the co-operation of all Southwestern Cattle Associations in protest.

Brunette Wins Beauty With Brains Contest; She Misses but Two Questions in 45 Minutes

Judge Mark Question, of The Post's Umbrella Court, proved once and for all last night that beautiful girls aren't necessarily dumb when he awarded Miss Mabel A. Sugnet (left), a WPA secretary, first prize, and Mrs. Mabel Meeker, of the Internal Revenue Bureau, second honors in The Post's "Beauty With Brains" contest. With four other Government employes, the two had been selected for their beauty Tuuesday at the Capitol Theater. Last night the brainiest were chosen. A World's Fair trip is one of the prizes

Miss Mabel A. Sugnet, a fair brunette standing 5½ feet and with a store of knowledge behind her hazel eyes, was decreed "Miss Beauty With Brains," a pretty smart girl, by Judge Mark Question at the Umbrella Court of the Air last night. Miss Sugnet does secretarial and administrative work for the WPA.

With the title and a silver loving cup, the gift of The Post, she goes next Friday to the New York World's Fair to be honor guest of th A. F. G. E. at Government Employes' Day, scheduled for Saturday, the 20th.

She snapped the answers to the questions like a popgun firing, missing but two, as her time was called, in a program lasting 45 minutes. She was given a score of 325 points.

Behind her with 275 points was Mrs. Mabel Meeker, a blonde, Western high school graduate, who has worked ten years in the Internal Revenue Department, but finding time, in the interim, to study law, get a degree and join the Federal, Women's and American Bar associations.

Pacing these two were Eva Sanders, of the Interior Department, and Mildred Allen, of the same establishment, with 250 points each; Mrs. Garry Smith, of Federal Power Commission, and Miss Mollie Drazin, of the HOLC, with 200 points each.

They had no easy road to victory When The Post, in co-operation with the American Federation of Government Employes, announced the contest to find a feminine Federal employe who best combined the qualities of beauty and brains, the candidates poured in. The number, carefully scrutinized, was sifted down to 25, and these appeared Tuesday night at Loew's Capitol Theater, where three judges, Senator Tydings, of Maryland; Representative Randolph, of West Virginia, and Eleanor Powell, the dancer, reduced the number to six. It was these six who confronted Judge Mark Question in court last night.

Native of Michigan

He snapped questions like these at them: Who owns the island of Madagascar? What fate did the United States Forest Service have in the recent reshuffling of Federal agencies? Who wrote "Lord Jim?" What was the outstanding occurrence for Government employes last June 24? Who is Herbert Putnam?

In the main, they stood up to the questions. And the winner:

She is a native of Ann Arbor, Mich., and has been employed here since September, 1935, in the Works Progress Administration, in a secretarial and administrative capacity. She dotes on American history.

Six to See Fair

Mrs. Meeker was born in Minnesota, but spent most of her life here. She obtained her law degree at Southeastern University and works in a legal capacity on the estate tax division of Internal Revenue.

All six of the finalists will go to the fair as the guests of the American Federation of Government Employes. But only "Miss Beauty With Brains" will have the spotlight on Government Employes' Day. Considerable entertainment has been arranged in her honor. The other five, who reached the finals, will be taken to the fair at varying times.

300 to Attend Holy Name Society Breakfast Tomorrow at St. Charles Catholic Church

Parish Women's Club Will Prepare Food; Arthur Reilly to Speak

More than 300 men and women are expected to attend tomorrow's annual breakfast of the Holy Name Society of St. Charles' Catholic Church, Clarendon, set for 8 a. m. tomorrow in the parish hall on North Washington boulevard.

Arthur (Lonely Hour) Reilly, radio commentator, is to speak on the program, which will be preceded by Mass at 7:15 a. m., conducted by the Rev. John A. Curran, rector, and the Rev. Kenneth W. Rizer, assistant rector.

Serving and preparing the food on the occasion, over which Robert McKay, Holy Name president, will preside, will be members of the Catholic Women's Club of the parish, who have distinguished themselves in providing meals for underprivileged children through the parochial school cafeteria, which closed its season yesterday. Mrs. J. L. Mathusa is president of the club.

Father Rizer

Complete reports are expected to exceed last season's records, according to leaders in the project, which last term provided 7,420 lunches, 4,238 bowls of soup, 9,310 pints of chocolate milk, 913 pints of milk, 2,597 deserts, 288 dozen buns, 32 additional gallons of chocolate milk and 18 gallons of milk, and 27 gallons of fruit juice.

Also playing a prominent role in the parish is the Ladies' Sodality, Mrs. Helen Haller, president; the Boys' Club, led by Frank Appel; Boy Scouts, of which Elmer Stocking is leader; Girl Scouts, with Mrs. Levina Nicholson as scoutmistress and Miss Dorothy Brown as assistant, and the Young Men's Club. The Knights of Columbus, Edward Douglass White Council, also is active.

Founded by the Right Rev. Augustine Van de Vyver, D. D., Bishop of Richmond, in 1909, St. Charles had as its first pastor the Rev. Fred P. Lackey, under whose leadership the present church was built, and which was dedicated in 1911 by the Apostolic Delegate Diomede Falconio, assisted by the Bishop of Richmond. Mass was said in the Knights of Pythias hall until the construction of the church.

The parochial school, which was dedicated in 1922, is expected to undergo improvements this summer, according to Father Curran, who indicated that two new rooms would be added. The Mission Church at Cherrydale, which was founded in 1914, attained independent status in 1936.

Father Curran

The Convent, of which Sister Rita is in charge, is another important unit of St. Charles' parish, to which the Rev. Mr. Curran came as rector in 1930, after serving at St. Peter's, Harpers Ferry, W. Va. The Rev. Mr. Rizer was transferred from the cathedral in Richmond to St. Charles in 1933.

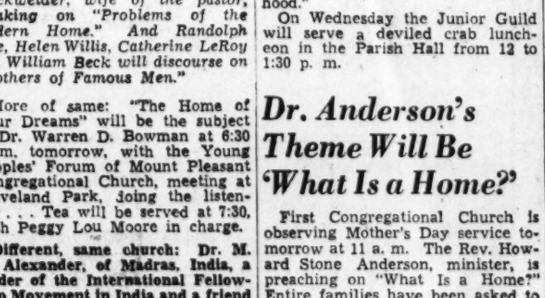
Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS



"CHRIST AROSE"

*Rev. Robert Lowry

"Low in the grave He lay—
Jesus my Savior!
Waiting the coming day—
Jesus my Lord."

Chorus:

"Up from the grave He arose,
With a mighty triumph o'er His foes;
He arose a Victor from the dark domain,
And He lives forever with His saints to reign.
He arose! He arose!
Hallelujah! Christ arose!"

"This inspiring Easter hymn, words and music, was written by the Rev. Robert Lowry who was pastor of a number of prominent Baptist churches in this country. It has become a universal favorite. Its arresting chorus, sung forte, fills the heart of the worshipper with hopefulness and joy.

Plan to Raise Coast Defense Is Announced

Artillery Units to Be Reorganized, Woodring Reveals

Secretary of War Woodring announced last night that the Nation's defenses against invasion would be greatly strengthened July 1 through a reorganization of Coast Artillery units.

By shifting officers and men from administrative to combat duties, 18 additional batteries of antiaircraft and seacoast guns will be established in continental United States. Six of the batteries are to be equipped with the latest type mobile antiaircraft rifles now on order, adding 83 per cent to the Regular Army's defense against air raids, Woodring estimated.

The remaining units created will put in active service long-range guns to guard Atlantic and Pacific harbors. Many of the coast defense guns fire 16-inch shells and can keep even the largest battleships out of firing distance.

To Reduce Overhead

No new officers and men will be added to the Coast Artillery as result of the order. Personnel for the new batteries will be obtained by reducing overhead and administrative units.

Each of the five antiaircraft regiments in continental United States will receive an additional battery of 3-inch antiaircraft rifles. They are mobile units of four guns each, carried on trucks and capable of being rushed to any position and set up quickly. Congress appropriated $23,000,000 last year for 338 of the guns.

Regiments Named

The regiments to be strengthened are: The Sixty-first at Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Sixty-second, at Fort Totten, N. Y.; Sixty-third, at Fort MacArthur, Calif.; Sixty-fifth, at Fort Winfield Scott, Calif., and the Sixty-ninth at Fort Crockett, Tex. The Fort Totten regiment will also gain a 37 mm. antiaircraft battery.

Four additional firing batteries will be "activated" at the harbor defenses of New York City, two at Sandy Hook and two at Fort H. G. Wright. The Sixth Coast Artillery at Fort Winfield Scott, Calif., also will receive two new batteries, while the following harbor defenses will be strengthened by one additional battery: Portland, Me.; Narragansett Bay, Mass.; Boston, Los Angeles, Fort Barrancas, Fla., and Fort Stevens, Oreg.

Another important effect of the move, Woodring said, will be that additional training can be given to reserve personnel.

Postlude

By Rav C. B. Brown.

Basi Toutorsky plays a piano recital Friday evening in Pierce Hall. Program: Sonata in D major (Mateo Albeniz), Sonatas in D major and D minor (Antonio Soler), Sonata in D major (Mateo Ferrer), Etude in C sharp minor (Skryabin), "The Lark" (Glinka-Balakirev), Prelude in F sharp minor, Fantaisie-Impromptu, Poem (Toutorsky), Barcarolle in G minor, Prelude in G minor (Rakhmaninov), Preludes in B major, G sharp minor, C minor and G minor; Ballade in F major, Valses in G flat major and E minor (Chopin).

Basil Toutorsky began his piano recital in Pierce Hall last evening most unconventionally by playing four sonatas in the key of D by three Spanish composers of the 18th and early 13th centuries, illustrating the period when the sonata, as a musical form, was still in its childhood. The first of these was by Mateo Albeniz, of whom historians tell us little more than that he was an organist and the father of Pedro Albeniz, who was born in 1795, became a virtuoso in his 'teens, and introduced the modern style of piano playing in Spain. Mateo's harpsichord style was evidently influenced by Domenico Scarlatti, who resided in Madrid from 1729 to 1757, for his sonata had an obviously Italianate air.

In the case of Padre Antonio Soler (1729-83), a monk who spent most of his life in the monastery of the Escorial, there is no doubt whatever about the imitation. Soler frankly professed himself a disciple of Scarlatti, and in his two sonatas there was the unmistakable evidence of the technical device of crossing the left hand over the right. If all his 65 harpsichord sonatas are as charming as these two samples, more of them should be exhumed. Indeed, Soler would merit considerable investigation, for he was a versatile musician, writing religious compositions with one hand, as it were, and with the other incidental music for plays, and a quantity of chamber music.

The master followed by Mateo Ferrer (1788-1864) was not Scarlatti but Beethoven, and the following was done at a discreet and humble distance. In his sonata one heard faint echoes of the early Beethoven in certain harmonies and turns of phrase.

After this excursion into Hispanic territory, Mr. Toutorsky turned to Russia with two familiar pieces Skryabin's C sharp minor etude and Balakirev's showy arrangement of Glinka's song, "The Lark." He then presented three compositions of his own, all of them in an improvisatory style with reminiscences of Chopin and Rakhmaninov. After that came Rakhmaniov's G minor barcarolle and the frequently heard prelude in the same key. The remainder of the program was devoted to seven compositions by Chopin—four preludes, the F major ballade and two valses.

Dewey Charges Employers With Pay Roll Tax Fraud

New York, May 12 (AP).—District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey tonight said the State workmen's compensation insurance fund had been defrauded of $3,000,000 in the last five years through a conspiracy of employers and fund auditors.

The disclosure followed the confession of one auditor, Joseph Malone, that he had taken bribes from employers to falsify the number of their employes, thereby reducing their insurance premiums. Malone pleaded guilty today and was released on $2,500 bail on the understanding he would help the investigators.

Turkey Pledges Aid to Britain

nouncement was made at Ankara by Dr. Refik Saydam, the Turkish prime minister.

British official quarters expressed confidence tonight that a similar interim accord between Turkey and France covering the Mediterranean would be announced within a few days. The delay is understood to be due to the desire of Ankara to secure further assurances from Paris relative to the cession of the Sanjak of Alexandretta.

It was suggested that under the provisional Anglo-Turkish agreement a three-power arrangement is implied, since Ankara understands fully that London and Paris are collaborating in the Mediterranean as elsewhere under what amounts to a close alliance.

Other Pacts Not Barred

In his declaration in the House of Commons, Chamberlain said that neither the provisional accord announced today, nor the proposed definitive agreement, was directed against any country, but rather "to assure Great Britain and Turkey of mutual aid and assistance should the necessity arise."

He added that preparatory to the conclusion of the definitive pact, close examination was being given to certain matters, including "the more precise definition of the various conditions which would bring the reciprocal engagements into operation."

Likewise the Prime Minister explained that both governments recognize the necessity "to secure the establishment of security in the Balkans, and they are consulting together with the object of achieving this purpose as speedily as possible."

In conclusion he said that the arrangements "need not preclude either government from making agreements with other countries in the general interest of the consolidation of peace."

Aim for Balkan Front

The announcement of Turkey's definite adhesion to the "peace front" is expected here to serve as a stimulus to the formation of a strong Balkan front against the "Drang Nach Osten" as engineered from Berlin and Rome. The hope is expressed that Turkey may be able to patch up the quarrel between Bulgaria and Rumania, that Bulgaria will be prepared to join the Balkan entente.

Moreover, because of the many common interests of Turkey and Soviet Russia, Turkey's declaration of intentions is expected to speed up the London-Moscow negotiations for a compromise under which the Soviets will be drawn into full collaboration. Though he did not mention the Soviet conversations, Chamberlain implied that certain points in the proposed "definitive long-term agreement" with Turkey might be dependent on the oucome of those talks.

Covers Mediterranean

In case of war, the question of the passage of warships and vessels through the Dardanelles is considered of the greatest importance. With access to the Black Sea, Britain and France might bring munitions and other supplies to both Rumania and Soviet Russia. In the World War, Turkey barred this single entry into the Black Sea, and thus seriously handicapped the western allies in bringing such assistance direly needed to Russia.

The adhesion of Turkey to the "peace front" is of especial value to Britain together with France as a deterrent to the fulfillment of Mussolini's designs in the Mediterranean. A special note is made of the fact that the provisional accord covers the "Mediterranean area," and not alone the eastern Mediterranean, in which Turkey's primary interests lie.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 12.—The text of Prime Minister Chamberlain's announcement of the British-Turkish accord in Commons, today, with subsequent questions and replies, follows:

His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom and the Turkish government have entered into close consultations and discussions which have taken place between them and which are still continuing have revealed their customary identity of view.

It is agreed that the two countries will conclude a definitive long-term agreement of reciprocal character in the interests of their national security.

Pending completion of a definitive agreement His Majesty's government and the Turkish government declare that in the event of an act of aggression leading to war in the Mediterranean area, they will be prepared to co-operate effectively and to lend each other all aid and assistance in their power.

This declaration, like the proposed agreement, is not directed against any country but is designed to assure Britain and Turkey of mutual aid and assistance should necessity arise.

Needs Closer Study

It is recognized by the two governments that certain matters, including more precise definition of various conditions which would bring reciprocal engagements into operation, will require closer examination before an agreement can be completed.

This examination is proceeding.

The two governments recognize that it is also necessary to insure establishment of security in the Balkans and they are consulting together with the object of achieving this purpose as speedily as possible.

It is understood the arrangements above mentioned do not preclude either government from making agreements with other countries in the general interests of consolidation of peace.

A similar declaration is being made in Ankara this evening.

(End of Chamberlain's text. Questions follow):

Clement R. Attlee, leader of the Labor opposition—While expressing satisfaction which I am sure we all feel at the statement made by the prime minister, may I ask whether this agreement will be followed by staff talks?

Queried on Rumania

Chamberlain—I do not think that will arise until a definite agreement has been concluded.

Arthur Henderson—May I ask whether this declaration is covered by article 19 of the Montreaux convention, which deals with the passage of British warships to come to the assistance of Rumania in the event of that country being attacked?

Chamberlain—The statement I read out obviously does not cover specific points of that kind. It is agreed the two countries will conclude a definite long-term agreement. Matters of that kind will no doubt be considered then.

Wedgewood Benn—Does that mean that the limit which at present exists on entry of ships into the Black Sea is now waived?

Chamberlain—It does not mean anything more than I have said.

Commander Fletcher—Was the term Mediterranean area so employed in order to exclude the Dardanelles and Black Sea

Chamberlain—No, sir.

Asks Further Definition

Frederick Cocks—I do not want to press the prime minister, but will he define more clearly what is meant by Mediterranean area? Does it mean other seas leading out of the Mediterranean such as the Adriatic and Black Sea and so on?

Chamberlain—I would prefer not to give a definition.

Geoffrey L. Mander—Does the prime minister not consider that if this potentially valuable agreement is to come into force at once it is essential to start conversations now and not wait possibly months for another agreement?

No reply was given.

Campbell Stephen—Can the prime minister give assurance that it is not part of this agreement that conscription of young men in this country shall be added to beyond the class 20-21 already before the House?

No answer was given.

Ben Smith—May I ask whether there is already an agreement between Turkey and Russia for passage of ships into the Black Sea and whether such agreement will be embodied in the terms of the definitive agreement?

Chamberlain—I really cannot say what will be included in the terms of the definitive agreement at this stage.

Samuel Silverman—Will he say whether an act of aggression leading to war in the Mediterranean area means an act of aggression anywhere or an act of aggression in the Mediterranean?

Chamberlain—It means an act of aggression which leads to war in the Mediterranean area.

Senators Urge 10% Cut in U.S. Agency Costs

Economy Bloc Sees $500,000,000 Saving In Adams Proposal

A plan to instruct heads of every Government agency to cut expenditures 10 per cent was under consideration last night by a group of economy-minded Senate Democrats led by Senator Arams, of Colorado.

Adams disclosed the proposal in yesterday's Senate debate on the farm bill and said he later will offer a joint resolution to enforce a saving he estimated at $500,000,000.

Opposes Arbitrary Cut

The Coloradan told reporters he was opposed to an arbitrary "horizontal" cut in every appropriation item, but said he thought an average 10 per cent saving could be made by directing heads of agencies to do their own cutting.

In a parallel move for economy, Senator King (Democrat), Utah, introduced a resolution providing that the total of all appropriations made this year be cut 10 per cent, with the exception of veterans' benefits and some other amounts.

Adams said he thought the time to act should be after Congressional appropriations are completed for the session, at which time he proposes to offer his resolution either as a rider on the last appropriation bill or as a separate measure.

He said he proposed giving department heads a 10 per cent leeway in making shifts of funds between bureaus, so that the cuts could be made with more flexibility and where they would hurt least.

Would Settle Tax Problem

If Congress accepts his proposal, he pointed out, it would be unnecessary to consider the question of finding new taxes the President has said would be required to finance extra-budgetary appropriations.

The 10 per cent slash in appropriations was originally proposed by Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee. At the same time, he suggested removal as well of business deterring taxes.

In Appropriation Committee consideration of the farm bill, Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, moved for a 5 per cent cut in that measure, but it was defeated when colleagues protested that farm appropriations should not be "singled out."

Rothschild Released by Nazi Police

Baron, Held 13 Months, Goes to Zurich, Then Paris

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, May 12.—Baron Louis Rothschild, head of the Vienna branch of the banking family, was released today after having been held prisoner by the Gestapo (secret police) since shortly after German annexation of Austria.

The Baron, whose freedom had been delayed by complicated negotiations involving his property in Austria, left immediately by airplane for Zurich, Switzerland.

His 13 months' imprisonment were spent on the top floor of the Metropole Hotel in two rooms adjoining those occupied by former Austrian Chancellor Schuschnigg, who apparently still was held in the large grey stone building on the Danube.

Louis is a brother of Baron Eugene Rothschild, who was host to the Duke of Windsor when the duke came to Austria for several months of voluntary "exile" after his abdication from the British throne.

Soon after Louis' imprisonment in April, 1938, it was reported the duke pleaded with German authorities for his release.

Zurich, Switzerland, May 12 (AP). Friends of Baron Louis Rothschild, released in Vienna today by German secret police after 13 months' imprisonment, said tonight he planned a suit against the Nazi government to regain his confiscated fortune.

The baron, looking aged and weak as a result of his detention, arrived here on a regularly scheduled airliner. After a short rest he left for Paris.

His hair, once a dark brown with a fringe of gray at the temples, had turned white. Those who came in contact with Rothschild said he appeared depressed.

Col. Lindbergh Ends Duty Tour; Continues Survey

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, returned to Washington yesterday, no longer an active Army officer but still at work on a Nation-wide survey of aircraft research facilities.

War Department officials revealed the flier reverted to civilian status April 29, when the normal two-week tour of active duty for Reserve officers expired. Since then he has been carrying on in a voluntary status, just as before except that he draws no pay.

Flying into Bolling Field from Charlotte, N. C., after a tour covering most of the United States, Lindbergh spent the day conferring with Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of Air Corps, and other officials. It was said the flier probably would remain here several days.

'Kidnaper' Gets Two-Year Term

Richmond, Va., May 12 (AP).—Albert Newsome Moore, 19, whom a jury convicted of kidnaping April 19, was sentenced by Federal Judge Robert N. Pollard today to two years in a Federal reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Moore pleaded innocent to a charge of having forced David W. Johnson, of Raleigh, N. C., at the point of a gun to drive him from Raleigh to a point near Richmond.

Judge Pollard sentenced Arthur Thompson, colored, of Spotsylvania county, to 18 months in the Federal reformatory at Petersburg and fined him $200 on a charge of violating his probation. He was convicted in a Spotsylvania trial justice court early this year on charges of being disorderly and disturbing church worship.

'Baskervilles' Tops Fine Bill At Capitol

Rathbone Plays Holmes; Kitty Carlisle Heads Varied Stage Show

"THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, adapted to the screen by Ernest Pascal, with Basil Rathbone, Richard Greene, Nigel Bruce, Wendy Barrie, Lionel Atwill, John Carradine, Barlowe Borland, Beryl Mercer, Morton Lowry, Ralph Forbes, E. E. Clive, Elly Malyon, Nigel De Brulier, Mary Gordon, Peter Willes, Ivan Simpson, Ian MacLaren, John Burton, Dennis Green and Evan Thomas. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

Elementary is the appeal of the Capitol's new bill, with beautiful Kitty Carlisle on the stage and Sherlock Holmes, the grandpappy of this depressing decade's dilettante detectives, untwining "The Hound of the Baskervilles" on the screen.

Sherlock dallies with one of his most characteristic mysteries, the astonishingly smart-looking Miss Carlisle sings with the sophistication of a Crown Princess and the result is better than good.

With the exception of "A Study in Scarlet," the mysterious curse of the Baskervilles is probably the most read of Holmes' cases. In fact, cast and director might well have performed from memory, so closely does the screen adaptation follow Conan Doyle's original.

Sir Henry Baskerville returns from Canada to succeed to the title of his mysteriously deceased uncle. The foreboding doctor of the Dartmoor village has appealed to the eminent detective for aid in verifying his suspicions. The eerie howling in the foggy night air has the moor's inhabitants jittery and Sir Richard is attacked by a frightful beast on the eve before his wedding.

Is Efficiently Done

This tale, that amounts to what later scholars well may call Early Sleuth Lore, has been handled in a very businesslike fashion, with care to detail. The Basil Rathbone Holmes is in the solid Baker street tradition, complete with Rathbone enunciation, pipe, cap and gimlet eye. Nigel Bruce's Dr. Watson seemed to us a trifle up on Rathbone, for he has endowed the slower-thinking doctor, with more humanism than that hardly used "stooge" generally gets. He rates the best line in the picture when, coming upon the young lovers, kissing for the first time, he declaims, "Would you mind pausing for a minute?"

Written in the year Doyle was knighted, 1902, the story has all manner of misleading figures. Lionel Atwill is the moribund medical neighbor; Richard Greene, the boyish Sir Henry, and Beryl Mercer, the spiritualist fancier. Two minor, but neat, performances are turned in by Barlowe Borland, as a legally-minded neighbor, and E. E. Clive, as a cockney cabby.

Known through her film, radio and light opera work, Kitty Carlisle has her audience with her before she starts, but more than wins any waverers by her brightness of manner and an ability to get right down to her songs, the first of which is a combination of Vincent Youmans' "Hallelujah" and "Great Day." "Heaven Can Wait," a group of waltzes and "The Masquerade Is Over" are the others of Miss Carlisle's numbers. The screen, we hasten to add, has never really done Miss Carlisle justice, for she is a slimmer and even more bewitching lady than the celluloids may have lead you to think.

A Magical Bartender

One of the most unique of all current variety acts is that of Dr. "Think-a-Drink" Hoffman, the magical bartender who pulls any—at least almost any—drink you can name, right out of the air. The house lights go up and anyone is more than likely to find himself sipping a Manhattan, a Benedictine or even a cup of coffee before the worthy gentleman takes his leave. The only fault we could find with the entire arrangement was that after all the motioning we did to the pretty assistants of Dr. Hoffman, who roam the audience with their trays, the best we could get was a glass of root beer!

Another good act is Bob Neller's ventriloquist workout, with one of those dummies that time is leading us to believe are really some strange sort of people, known only to a select group that palms itself off as ventriloquists. Be sure that at the performance you attend, Bob makes Phil Lampkin sing about his school days.

Other acts include Cappy Barra and his Harmonica Ensemble and the Three Castles, rhythm dancers. A comic cartoon and a Phil Lampkin overture round out the bill.

RICHARD L. COE.

Metropolitan

"Dark Victory" moves victoriously into its third week downtown, with Bette Davis already handed her third Academy Award in critic's plaudits.

That a story so weak can emerge as an unforgettable experience in the rebirth of a soul is a tribute to the genius of Miss Davis and her supporting players. For with all the worn angles of the story, it yet manages to seem new as dawn and the delineation of engrossing events occuring to someone you know very well.

Playing a richly inhibited member of the station-wagon set, who drink and flip a gay fin at life, Bette Davis portrays superbly the steady disintegration of the sufferer from a malignant brain growth. Neurotically she surges through her days in a daze which steadily grows worse. Rejuvenation comes after an operation by Surgeon George Brent who brings to her also a measure of peace. She goes to her death with thoroughbred courage. And if anyone seeing the death scene doesn't squeeze out at least one reluctant teardrop, then hope for him there is none.

Newcomer Geraldine Fitzgerald, Humphrey Bogart and George Brent are notable in their skillful underplaying which serves as counterpoint to the staccatto brilliance of Miss Davis' role.

Porky the pig meets vice in the nature of a racetrack in an animated cartoon further relating the adventures of the valiantly stuttering little fellow. Beautifully colored and vastly interesting is a short on mechanics, covering with generous scope the making of pens, coloring of rubber, dipping of chocolates and new crime-detection methods in use in police laboratories.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

"UNION PACIFIC." Cecil B. De Mille's picturization for Paramount of a story by Ernest Haycox, adapted to the screen by Jack Cunningham, Walter DeLeon, C. Gardner Sullivan and Jesse Lasky, jr., costarring Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea, with Lynne Overman, Robert Preston, Akim Tamiroff, Brian Donlevy, Anthony Quinn, Stanley Ridges, William Heade, Fuzzy Knight, J. M. Kerrigan, Regis Toomey, Henry Kolker, Sheila Darcy, Lon Chaney, jr., Francis MacDonald, Julia Faye and scores more. Directed by Mr. De Mille. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

It is a broad canvas that Cecil B. De Mille has painted in this expansive epic of pioneering in the Old West. Upon it he has spread in broad strokes the romance, adventure, intrigue and violence of a day that was wild and exciting in its indifference to any vestige of law and order.

BELL

Lest it be thought that "Union Pacific" is any drab and dull recital of the mere matter of building a railroad, it should be said at once that it is a composite of every melodramatic element that ever went into the making of a thunderous "Western." As a matter of fact, there is enough action in this picture to supply ample motivation for a series of serials.

This turbulent development of a tempestuous story is initiated with political conferences in Washington immediately following the conclusion of the War Between the States. It is decided in the Senate that a transcontinental railroad would be a good thing for the country, although the idea is opposed vigorously by some of the "conservatives" who believed that the United States already was big enough without the conquest of the West. We get, then, into the financial intrigue through which one conniving promoter hopes to wreck the Union Pacific, in favor of one of his own pet enterprises, and thus make a "killing" in the market. To aid his scheme, he employs Sid Campeau, one of the tougher of the gamblers, to pitch his "Big Tent" continuously at the "end of road" and impede construction through the agency of gambling, drink, shady dancehall ladies and anything else he can think of.

Enter the "Trouble Shooter"

But the Union Pacific officials are not completely asleep, either. They employ a former Union captain to serve as "trouble shooter" and keep the right of way free from such encroachments as Campeau plans. There is the basis of the film's bitter and belligerent conflict. The romantic aspects of the narrative center in Mollie Monahan, a "daughter of the railroad," whose father is the company's best engineer. Jeff Butler, the minion of law and order, falls desperately in love with her and so does Dick Allen, Campeau's chief henchman.

Out of these divergent ramifications of plot, De Mille has evolved a remarkably co-ordinated screen plan that moves with the force of a tempest from first flash to last. There is, perhaps, a little too much of it—the picture runs in excess of two hours—but everything that is shown on the screen is superlatively well done from any informed point of view.

There are wild riding, many killings, some very elegant brawls, the demolition of Mr. Campeau's favorite saloon, an Indian attack and a cavalry rescue to furnish climaxes for the many closely woven sequences that form the running account of a huge and finally successful undertaking. Interlarded with these major episodes is an almost continuous flow of comedy and romance, with occasional intervals of pathos. There is nothing in "Union Pacific," in short, that Mr. De Mille's long experience has not taught him belongs in a motion picture. If his latest work is to bear any handicap at all, it will be that it is the last, instead of the first, of the recent surge of "Westerns" to reach the screen. In many respects it is strikingly like "Dodge City" and to lesser degree makes use of many of the basic elements that were conspicuous in "Jesse James" and "The Oklahoma Kid."

Is Splendidly Cast

De Mille did not stint on cast any more than he did on production. The roster of principals in "Union Pacific" is enormous, as such things are gauged in this business. Sagacious judgment was displayed in the selection of Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea for the leading roles. Miss Stanwyck never has been so good—what with her thick Irish brogue and all—and Mr. McCrea may look to his Jeff Butler, too, as one of his outstanding performances.

There are so many others in the cast that to name them all would be impossible. Some, however, deserve to be singled out. Among them are Lynne Overman, who almost "steals the picture" as Leach Overmile; Akin Tamiroff, cast as a sort of Wild West "Dominique You;" Robert Preston, who comes to prominence here in the best role he ever has had; Brian Donlevy, as Campeau; Stanley Ridges, Anthony Quinn and Henry Kolker. Sheila Darcy is an ominous dance hall girl and Regis Toomey has an important bit in one scene.

Owing to the length of "Union Pacific," the stage bill at the Earle this week is brief. It also is excellent. The Virginians, a male singing sextet, are a substantial hit in their white ties and tails and do marvels with "Franklin Delano Roosevelt James" and "Shadrach." Carol King toe dances with unusual skill, introducing something a little new in her unique variation of tempos, and Dick, Don and Dinah put on a serio-comic acrobatic act that is not quite like anything you ever have seen. The Roxyettes, in the meantime, are prancing with live cockatoos on their arms, cavorting on bicycles and otherwise diverting themselves.

The Paramount News completes a genuinely superlative bill.

Took Two Hours

So intricate is Ray Bolger's make-up as the Scarecrow in "The Wizard of Oz" that it requires two hours to put it on daily.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, May 12.

GEORGE VI: President and Mrs. Roosevelt, your hosts at the White House, have agreed to satisfy the first requests made by you and the Queen. And so you'll both get your wish: you will attend the President's press conference and Queen Elizabeth will attend Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference . . . Gov. Lehman: The reason why District Attorney Dewey is bringing Meyer Luckman—who was sentenced in the Drukman murder case—to New York from Sing Sing concerns a homicide once committed by Fred Hull, his co-defendant, who later received a pardon in that case . . . Libby Holman: Your new brother-in-law, Phillips Holmes, visited the cafes the other night using crutches. He says he slipped.

JOHN D. M. HAMILTON: Kenneth Simpson, the Republican leader here, yesterday confided: "The trouble with out party is that we have everybody with us—except the voters . . . And as for Roosevelt, we've succeeded in getting everybody against him 364 days a year—but not on election day."

JUSTICE EDGAR LAUER: Albert Chaperau, who was sentenced in the smuggling case and whose sentence later was reduced, still is at the House of Detention and hasn't been sent to prison yet. He's spilling his entire story to United States Attorney Cahill . . . Grover Whalen: Teddy Hayes, who admits having removed Louis Slobodkin's prize-winning statue of Abe Lincoln from the Fair grounds, but still hasn't produced the missing statue, was at the Stork Club yesterday, where he declared: "As far as I'm concerned, the incident is closed" . . . Orson Welles: Hollywood wants you to play the role of the Dictator in "It Can't Happen Here."

WILL HAYS: When Paramount's "Union Pacific" had its premiere in Omaha, the citizens gathered from miles around to witness this spectacular event . . . That night, the most exciting night in Omaha's history, the populace heeded the police pleas to refrain from violating any ordinances . . . The only transgressors who were arrested that night were three members of Paramount's publicity department, who had been sent to Omaha to record the local activities.

DARRYL ZANUCK: Gypsy Rose Lee, whom you released from her film contract, will make her debut in the legitimate theater at the Great Neck Playhouse in July. She'll emote in "Personal Appearance" . . . Frank Morgan: While you were dining at Armando's the other night you sat next to William Powers Meloney, the Assistant United States Attorney, who is prosecuting the William Buckner case—in which you were one of the Hollywood stars interrogated . . . J. Edgar Hoover: Gustave Blair, the 69-year-old carpenter who was legally identified by the Maricopa County Superior Court as Charley Ross, who was kidnaped 65 years ago—broadcast for a New York radio program last year. He then stated that he had been given assurance that the court would identify him as the missing heir.

CRITICS CIRCLE: Laurette Taylor this week received from Eleanor Roosevelt the Barter Theater Award for her performance in "Outward Bound." Miss Taylor, who had retired from the stage after her husband's death, made gracious reply . . . "In the theater," she said, "opportunity knocks almost every day—and I delayed opening the door . . . I've been in the shade a long time. It's nice being in the sun again . . ."

STATE LIQUOR AUTHORITY: McKesson & Robbins will lose its distribution rights to the Jack Dempsey brand of liquor. Jack is stepping out of that picture . . . District Attorney Dewey: Why all the front-page to-do last week about the "disappearance" of Sam Grossman—the man who was living with Dixie Davis, George Weinberg and Hope Dare in Philadelphia when they were arrested? His "disappearance" was reported in this space on March 31 . . . Newspaper Guild: Contrary to all reports, P. M., the new evening tabloid, as yet hasn't hired a single employe . . . W. S. Gifford: Mayor LaGuardia ordered the removal of all extension phones at City Hall.

BROADWAY ASSOCIATION: Charles Adler, of the Yacht Club Boys, went to Lindy's the other night and saw the preparations for the new annex . . . "Why don't you alphabetize the new quarters." Adler suggested, "and have an 'A' section for acrobats, 'B' section for banjoists, 'C' section for clarinet players, etc.? You know your customers. They might like it" . . . "Maybe I'll do it," Lindy agreed. "Then I'll need this entire big place for the 'H' section" . . . "What's the 'H' section?" asked Adler, "harmonica players?" . . . "No," Lindy explained, "'has-beens'."

Bronte Drama Opens Its Run At Columbia

'Wuthering Heights' Is Hailed Again As 'Miracle Film'

A living story is always modern, written 200 or 2,000 years ago. So "Wuthering Heights," of the crinoline period, is also circa 1939. It has the double appeal of the picturesque and the psychopathic.

Already "Wuthering Heights" is ranked among the top pictures of the year, both in audience and critical appeal. Its long run at the Palace is naturally succeeded by its current Columbia engagement. Reports from all over the country show similar success. Practically, it's a miracle picture, with highbrows and the general public agreed.

Hollywood will learn things from "Wuthering Heights" and its tremendous public appeal. First, it should learn to respect the public and its integral understanding. Second, third and fourth, come the same things. The public can likewise learn things from "Wuthering Heights," a story written a century before its time—a story full of the unmentioned implications of Freud and Jung. Still such a story as to reach every heart. It is a story full of unnamable implications, but simple as life itself. That's why folks crowd to see it, why its every fadeout is accompanied by coughs, snivels and reaching for hankies. And, goodness knows, the picture is not essentially sentimental. There's a certain "escape psychosis" about it at the last. That's all. For the rest, it has the savor of pure horror.

Embraces Odd Beauty

The story of "Wuthering Heights" is not to be summarized. It encompasses the uncanny beauty of lonely moors and bitterly lonely souls, an atmosphere peculiar to the writing of the Bronte sisters. It has a love that is more poisonous than avowed hatred, it has a hatred full of tenderness. It has implied motives not to be noted by the casual onlooker. We're sorry that Dr. Freud hasn't written brochures on the involved psychology of the story.

But though "Wuthering Heights" may be a simple romance with fairy tale overtones (for the easy minded) or a fatal fable (for the tangle-loving cerebellum), it is still a great story, its principal credit due to the Bronte authoress who has slept quietly for a century or more in a quiet English grave. Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur adapted the story. Clever boys they are, but their cleverness this time was in their honour and close adherence to the spirit of a long dead lady.

Story of the Spirit

The story of "Wuthering Heights" is one of spirit, not of plot. But the performance of Merle Oberon is of the Bronte inspiration, especially when her jealousy, carefully concealed, blossoms out in a subtle sequence, again in her final scene that has the strange quality of the low-lying suns of death. This last argues that Oberon did clinical observation before facing the camera—and with well justified results. She gives you—death.

Laurence Olivier plays opposite Oberon as Heathcliff, and very finely, too. No one in Hollywood, with the possible exception of Francis Lederer, could have done the part so well. Almost better we liked Flora Robson as the old nurse, Geraldine Fitzgerald as Heathcliff's luckless and infatuated wife, dying while she lived.

"Wuthering Heights" is one of the great stories of the last two centuries, one of the great pictures of the year. MARY HARRIS.

Director Shoots First Scene First

It happened with the start of camera work on "Man About Town," the new Jack Benny picture, with Dorothy Lamour, Edward Arnold and a lengthy supporting cast.

The opening scenes are laid in the Benny suite in a smart London hotel, where much of the story unfolds, with a revue theater and an English country manor as other major settings.

Mark Sandrich is the director, Arthur Hornblow, jr., the producer.

Gets Thanks

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 12 (1935).—Allan Jones, who never rated top singing honors on the M-G-M lot because Nelson Eddy got there first has just signed with Paramount on a long term contract. His first is to be "Are Husbands Necessary?" with Madeleine Carroll and Fred MacMurray. Smart move on Allan's part, I would say, since Para has never had a singing male star under contract and he's sure to get better breaks than Leo, the Lion, found for him.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Yet it is amusing that he sings only one song in "Are Husbands Necessary?" His real break doesn't come until his second picture, "Victor Herbert," where he can run the scales to his heart's content, under the direction of E. H. Griffith. No, he will not play the Herbert role, but will be seen and heard as the romantic hero whose life is influenced by the beautiful Herbert melodies. In case you can't wait to find out who is producing these operas, Jeff Lazarus is the guiding genius of "Are Husbands Necessary?" and Andrew Stone of "Victor Herbert."

I told you some time ago that Richard Greene was getting the fourth largest fan mail on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot—and with Nancy Kelly coming along nicely, too, Darryl Zanuck has decided to co-star them in "Here I Am a Stranger." This is a college story, but with a serious background, for a change, and has none of the rah-rah or whoopee that usually goes with the goldfish eaters yarns. This won't be the first time Dick and Nancy have worked together, having recently completed "Stanley and Livingstone." William Seiter is set to direct "Here I Am a Stranger," which starts immediately.

After barring "The King and the Chorus Girl" for two or three years, the British censors have finally lifted the ban on the Merwyn Leroy picture and okayed its release under the new title "Romance Is Sacred." Of course, staid Britishers are trying not to notice Fernand Gravet's great resemblance to former King Edward, or any similarity in plot to his romance with a commoner. The censors are still forbidding the use of Gravet's stills outside the theater—or the use of his picture in the papers—but they tell me the British public is wildly interested and beating a well-worn path to the box office.

Chater in Hollywood: Radiant, indeed, was Constance Bennett with Gilbert Roland at the Troc opening. Yes, all is forgiven and forgotten and it's my belief that Connie will now actually obtain her divorce from the Marquis de la Falaise and marry Gilbert. The only thing that could possibly prevent the divorce is the financial arrangement the titled Frenchman is asking as part of his community property settlement. Connie is a smart businesswoman, and since she has made every dollar herself, she won't agree to any settlement she feels isn't right.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Errol Flynn planes to South America as soon as he finishes playing Essex; John Barrymore's Chicago interview when he heard about Elaine's divorce action was a howl. You can never get the best of Barrymore in a battle of wits; Bonita Granville, who has spent all her 16 years in apartments, is moving into a home at Toluca Lake; the new Troc is really swank, with its pink walls and not too bright lighting; the Duchess of Westminister, in a pink frock, was the guest of the Darryl Zanucks; Marelene Dietrich, in a very low cut gown, also in the Zanuck party, with the devoted Erich Remarque; Elsa Maxwell, who talks about her movie experiences with great gusto, seated next to Gregory Ratoff, her director. I accused her of red appling teacher.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 12.—Now that Bette Davis is playing Queen Elizabeth and Errol Flynn, Essex, in "The Knight and the Lady," it may interest you to know that living and working quietly here in Glendale is Marie Bauer, who will soon publish another book on the Baconian theory. She'll tell about her discoveries of the Bruton vault in Williamsburg, Va., last summer, which will be enlightening to every Shakespearian student and all Free Masons. She claims to have discovered a new code in the Shakespearian works of an anagrammatic nature. If her decoding is correct, which only time can prove, and his works are actually found in this vault, her claim is that Bacon was Elizabeth's first son by the Earl of Leicester, and Essex was her second son.

HOPPER

Miss Bauer's work is an unselfish labor of love, for the enlightenment of future generations, trying to prove that nothing in the heavens above or the earth below will ever be hidden from truth.

Understand Garbo is having more than her usual worry over the recent loss of that foreign market, where she always cleaned up. She never was a big seller in America.

Looks like the end of the golden rainbow for those foreign faces whose pictures made all their money on the other side.

Charles Boyer is smart. He's so friendly, adopted our ways, bought a home and is so accessible, we almost forget he's a Frenchman—consider him one of our own.

That handsome pianist, Dalies Franz, now that he's turned screen actor, gets his first real opportunity as Dmitri in "Balalaika," with Nelson Eddy and Ilona Massey.

Real star of that picture is Edward Ellis, who made such a hit in "The Man to Remember." Eddie's one of our really fine actors, but not much attention was paid him until he held out for two years for a good part. Now, R.-K.-O.'s put him under long-term contract. A tip to all you character men: if you can keep from starving, wait. The part will find you, and you'll make ten times as much, and won't have to work so hard.

WHAT'S EUROPEAN BEER GOT THAT GUNTHER'S CAN'T BEAT?

HOW CAN GUNTHER'S DO IT AT A DIME?

● How can Gunther's offer such high quality beer at the price of regular beers? There are three big reasons: 1. Gunther's makes hundreds of thousands of BARRELS of beer (the equivalent of over 90 MILLION bottles) ... more than any other beer in this part of the country! This big volume means big savings on ingredient and brewing costs. 2. Most all of Gunther's is sold to folks right here in Maryland and D. C.... this means that no long haul shipping charges are added to the cost of Gunther's. 3. Most of it is delivered direct from the brewery to your dealer in our own trucks ... another enormous saving, because breweries from other states have to pay as much as 30 to 50¢ per case to the wholesalers who handle their beer.

Put all these big savings together and you can see why folks around here can have Gunther's quality at a dime, whereas if you lived in New York, Milwaukee, St. Louis, etc., you would have to pay at least 15¢ per bottle for it.

Gunther Brewing Company
Baltimore, Maryland

Gentlemen:-

On last Thursday evening, at a dinner of our members, held in the Empire Room of the Hotel Lexington, a very thorough and comprehensive test was made to determine the relative merits of famous imported and domestic beers.

It was gratifying to see how the standards of brewing in this country have produced beer so excellent in taste, body, and color; that three domestic beers were virtually comparable in every way with three world-famous imported beers.

Thirty-seven experts, all master bar-men and wine stewards, engaged in this test, and none were permitted to know the names of the beers they tasted until the test was concluded.

You may also be gratified to learn that Gunthers was one of the highest ranking beers, receiving, as it did, the second highest number of votes for first choice. It was only exceeded by one world-famous imported beer in the opinion of these experts.

Yours very truly,

INTERNATIONAL BARMEN ASSOCIATION

By this Pledge

Let it be known that Gunther's beer will always be brewed according to the highest standards of the art of brewing. We will never use any but the finest ingredients, and thus maintain the same remarkable dry lager quality that places it among the finest beers, domestic or imported.

The high cost of making Gunther's prohibits the giving away of premiums or prizes. All the value is in the beer!

THESE experts were told that there would be 3 beers from the U. S. A. and 3 famous imports from abroad. Nothing else. They were not told which was which. Each man was asked to pick the beer he preferred to all the others.

The voting was close. They were all good beers. A European beer won. But Gunther's, the beer so well known in Baltimore and Washington came next and actually led the other two fine imported beers!

HERE'S HOW EXPERTS VOTED FOR 1st CHOICE
(The beer they liked best!)

Import A.	24.3	Import B . .	16.2
Domestic X (Gunther's)	18.9	Domestic Z . .	13.5
Domestic Y	16.2	Import C . .	10.9

'Baskervilles' Tops Fine Bill At Capitol

Rathbone Plays Holmes; Kitty Carlisle Heads Varied Stage Show

"THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, adapted to the screen by Ernest Pascal, with Basil Rathbone, Richard Greene, Nigel Bruce, Wendy Barrie, Lionel Atwill, John Carradine, Barlowe Borland, Beryl Mercer, Morton Lowry, Ralph Forbes, E. E. Clive, Lily Malyon, Nigel de Brulier, Mary Gordon, Peter Willes, Ivan Simpson, Ian MacLaren, John Burton, Dennis Green and Evan Thomas. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Reviewed Friday afternoon, At the Capitol Theater.

Elementary is the appeal of the Capitol's new bill, with beautiful Kitty Carlisle on the stage and Sherlock Holmes, the grandpappy of this depressing decade's dilettante detectives, untwining "The Hound of the Baskervilles" on the screen.

Sherlock dallies with one of his most characteristic mysteries, the astonishingly smart-looking Miss Carlisle sings with the sophistication of a Crown Princess and the result is better than good.

With the exception of "A Study in Scarlet," the mysterious curse of the Baskervilles is probably the most read of Holmes' cases. In fact, cast and director might well have performed from memory, so closely does the screen adaptation follow Conan Doyle's original.

Sir Henry Baskerville returns from Canada to succeed to the title of his mysteriously deceased uncle. The foreboding doctor of the Dartmoor village has appealed to the eminent detective for aid in verifying his suspicions. The eerie howling in the foggy night air has the moor's inhabitants jittery and Sir Richard is attacked by a frightful beast on the eve before his wedding.

Is Efficiently Done

This tale, that amounts to what later scholars well may call Early Sleuth Lore, has been handled in a very businesslike fashion, with care to detail. The Basil Rathbone Holmes is in the solid Baker street tradition, complete with Rathbone enunciation, pipe, cap and gimlet eye. Nigel Bruce's Dr. Watson seemed to us a trifle up on Rathbone, for he has endowed the slower-thinking doctor, with more humanism than that hardly used "stooge" generally gets. He rates the best line in the picture when, coming upon the young lovers, kissing for the first time, he declaims, "Would you mind pausing for a minute?"

Written in the year Doyle was knighted, 1902, the story has all manner of misleading figures. Lionel Atwill is the moribund medical neighbor; Richard Greene, the boyish Sir Henry, and Beryl Mercer, the spiritualist fancier. Two minor, but neat, performances are turned in by Barlowe Borland, as a legally-minded neighbor, and E. E. Clive, as a cockney cabby.

Known through her film, radio and light opera work, Kitty Carlisle has her audience with her before she starts, but more than wins any waverers by her brightness of manner and an ability to get right down to her songs, the first of which is a combination of Vincent Youmans' "Hallelujah" and "Great Day." "Heaven Can Wait," a group of waltzes and "The Masquerade Is Over" are the others of Miss Carlisle's numbers. The screen, we hasten to add, has never really done Miss Carlisle justice, for she is a slimmer and even more bewitching lady than the celluloids may have lead you to think.

A Magical Bartender

One of the most unique of all current variety acts is that of Dr. "Think-a-Drink" Hoffman, the magical bartender who pulls any—at least almost any—drink you can name, right out of the air. The house lights go up and anyone is more than likely to find himself sipping a Manhattan, a Benedictine or even a cup of coffee before the worthy gentleman takes his leave. The only fault we could find with the entire arrangement was that after all the motioning we did to the pretty assistants of Dr. Hoffman, who roam the audience with their trays, the best we could get was a glass of root beer!

Another good act is Bob Neller's ventriloquist workout, with one of those dummies that time is leading us to believe are really some strange sort of people, known only to a select group that palms itself off as ventriloquists. Be sure that at the performance you attend, Bob makes Phil Lampkin sing about his school days.

Other acts include Cappy Barra and his Harmonica Ensemble and the Three Castles, rhythm dancers. A comic cartoon and a Phil Lampkin overture round out the bill.

"Dark Victory" moves victoriously into its third week downtown, with Bette Davis already handed her third Academy Award in critic's plaudits.

That a story so weak can emerge as an unforgettable experience in the rebirth of a soul is a tribute to the genius of Miss Davis and her supporting players. For with all the worn angles of the story, it yet manages to seem new as dawn and the delineation of engrossing events occuring to someone you know very well.

Playing a richly inhibited member of the station-wagon set, who drink and flip a gay fin at life, Bette Davis portrays superbly the steady disintegration of the sufferer from a malignant brain growth. Neurotically she surges through her days in a daze which steadily grows worse. Rejuvenation comes after an operation by Surgeon George Brent who brings to her also a measure of peace. She goes to her death with thoroughbred courage. And if anyone seeing the death scene doesn't squeeze out at least one reluctant teardrop, then hope for him there is none.

Newcomer Geraldine Fitzgerald, Humphrey Bogart and George Brent are notable in their skillful underplaying which serves as counterpoint to the staccatto brilliance of Miss Davis' role.

Porky the pig meets vice in the nature of a racetrack in an animated cartoon further relating the adventures of the valiantly stuttering little fellow. Beautifully colored and vastly interesting is a short on mechanics, covering with generous scope the making of pens, coloring of rubber, dipping of chocolates and new crime-detection methods in use in police laboratories.

De Mille's 'Union Pacific' Proves Biggest of the 'Westerns,' at Earle

"UNION PACIFIC." Cecil B. De Mille's picturization for Paramount of a story by Ernest Haycox, adapted to the screen by Jack Cunningham, Walter DeLeon, C. Gardner Sullivan and Jesse Lasky, jr., costarring Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea, with Lynne Overman, Robert Preston, Akim Tamiroff, Brian Donlevy, Anthony Quinn, Stanley Ridges, Williams Haade, Fuzzy Knight, J. M. Kerrigan, Regis Toomey, Henry Kolker, Sheila Darcy, Lon Chaney, jr., Francis MacDonald, Julia Faye and scores more. Directed by Mr. De Mille. Reviewed Friday afternoon, At the Earle Theater.

It is a broad canvas that Cecil B. De Mille has painted in this expansive epic of pioneering in the Old West. Upon it he has spread in broad strokes the romance, adventure, intrigue and violence of a day that was wild and exciting in its indifference to any vestige of law and order.

BELL

Lest it be thought that "Union Pacific" is any drab and dull recital of the mere matter of building a railroad, it should be said at once that it is a composite of every melodramatic element that ever went into the making of a thunderous "Western." As a matter of fact, there is enough action in this picture to supply ample motivation for a series of serials.

This turbulent development of a tempestuous story is initiated with political conferences in Washington immediately following the conclusion of the War Between the States. It is decided in the Senate that a transcontinental railroad would be a good thing for the country, although the idea is opposed vigorously by some of the "conservatives" who believed that the United States already was big enough without the conquest of the West. We get, then, into the financial intrigue through which one conniving promoter hopes to wreck the Union Pacific, in favor of one of his own pet enterprises, and thus make a "killing" in the market. To aid his scheme, he employs Sid Campeau, one of the tougher of the gamblers, to pitch his "Big Tent" continuously at the "end of road" and impede construction through the agency of gambling, drink, shady dancehall ladies and anything else he can think of.

Enter the "Trouble Shooter"

But the Union Pacific officials are not completely asleep, either. They employ a former Union captain to serve as "trouble shooter" and keep the right of way free from such encroachments as Campeau plans. There is the basis of the film's bitter and belligerent conflict. The romantic aspects of the narrative center in Mollie Monahan, a "daughter of the railroad," whose father is the company's best engineer. Jeff Butler, the minion of law and order, falls desperately in love with her and so does Dick Allen, Campeau's chief henchman.

Out of these divergent ramifications of plot, De Mille has evolved a remarkably co-ordinated screen plan that moves with the force of a tempest from first flash to last. There is, perhaps, a little too much of it—the picture runs in excess of two hours—but everything that is shown on the screen is superlatively well done from any informed point of view.

There are wild riding, many killings, some very elegant brawls, the demolition of Mr. Campeau's favorite saloon, an Indian attack and a cavalry rescue to furnish climaxes for the many closely woven sequences that form the running account of a huge and finally successful undertaking. Interlarded with these major episodes is an almost continuous flow of comedy and romance, with occasional intervals of pathos. There is nothing in "Union Pacific," in short, that Mr. De Mille's long experience has not taught him belongs in a motion picture. If his latest work is to bear any handicap at all, it will be that it is the last, instead of the first, of the recent surge of "Westerns" to reach the screen. In many respects it is strikingly like "Dodge City" and to lesser degree makes use of many of the basic elements that were conspicuous in "Jesse James" and "The Oklahoma Kid."

Is Splendidly Cast

De Mille did not stint on cast any more than he did on production. The roster of principals in "Union Pacific" is enormous, as such things are gauged in this business. Sagacious judgment was displayed in the selection of Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea for the leading roles. Miss Stanwyck never has been so good—what with her thick Irish brogue and all—and Mr. McCrea may look to his Jeff Butler, too, as one of his outstanding performances.

There are so many others in the cast that to name them all would be impossible. Some, however, deserve to be singled out. Among them are Lynne Overman, who almost "steals the picture" as Leach Overmile; Akin Tamiroff, cast as a sort of Wild West "Dominique You;" Robert Preston, who comes to prominence here in the best role he ever has had; Brian Donlevy, as Campeau; Stanley Ridges, Anthony Quinn and Henry Kolker. Sheila Darcy is an ominous dance hall girl and Regis Toomey has an important bit in one scene.

Owing to the length of "Union Pacific," the stage bill at the Earle this week is brief. It also is excellent. The Virginians, a male singing sextet, are a substantial hit in their white ties and tails and do marvels with "Franklin Delano Roosevelt James" and "Shadrach." Carol King toe dances with unusual skill, introducing something a little new in her unique variation of tempos, and Dick, Don and Dinah put on a serio-comic acrobatic act that is not quite like anything you ever have seen. The Roxyettes, in the meantime, are prancing with live cockatoos on their arms, cavorting on bicycles and otherwise diverting themselves.

The Paramount News completes a genuinely superlative bill.

Took Two Hours

So intricate is Ray Bolger's makeup as the Scarecrow in "The Wizard of Oz" that it requires two hours to put it on daily.

BARBARA STANWYCK AND JOEL McCREA in the roles of Mollie Monahan and Jeff Butler, in Cecil B. The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, May 12.

GEORGE VI: President and Mrs. Roosevelt, your hosts at the White House, have agreed to satisfy the first requests made by you and the Queen. And so you'll both get your wish: you will attend the President's press conference and Queen Elizabeth will attend Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference . . . Gov. Lehman: The reason why District Attorney Dewey is bringing Meyer Luckman—who was sentenced in the Drukman murder case—to New York from Sing Sing concerns a homicide once committed by Fred Hull, his co-defendant, who later received a pardon in that case . . . Libby Holman: Your new brother-in-law, Phillips Holmes, visited the cafes the other night using crutches. He says he slipped.

JOHN D. M. HAMILTON: Kenneth Simpson, the Republican leader here, yesterday confided: "The trouble with out party is that we have everybody with us—except the voters . . . And as for Roosevelt, we've succeeded in getting everybody against him 364 days a year—but not on election day."

JUSTICE EDGAR LAUER: Albert Chaperau, who was sentenced in the smuggling case and whose sentence later was reduced, still is at the House of Detention and hasn't been sent to prison yet. He's spilling his entire story to United States Attorney Cahill . . . Grover Whalen: Teddy Hayes, who admits having removed Louis Slobodkin's prize-winning statue of Abe Lincoln from the Fair grounds, but still hasn't produced the missing statue, was at the Stork Club yesterday, where he declared: "As far as I'm concerned, the incident is closed" . . . Orson Welles: Hollywood wants you to play the role of the Dictator in "It Can't Happen Here."

WILL HAYS: When Paramount's "Union Pacific" had its premiere in Omaha, the citizens gathered from miles around to witness this spectacular event . . . That night, the most exciting night in Omaha's history, the populace heeded the police pleas to refrain from violating any ordinances . . . The only transgressors who were arrested that night were three members of Paramount's publicity department, who had been sent to Omaha to record the local activities.

DARRYL ZANUCK: Gypsy Rose Lee, whom you released from her film contract, will make her debut in the legitimate theater at the Great Neck Playhouse in July. She'll emote in "Personal Appearance" . . . Frank Morgan: While you were dining at Armando's the other night you sat next to William Powers Meloney, the Assistant United States Attorney, who is prosecuting the William Buckner case—in which you were one of the Hollywood stars interrogated . . . J. Edgar Hoover: Gustave Blair, the 69-year-old carpenter who was legally identified by the Maricopa County Superior Court as Charley Ross, who was kidnaped 65 years ago—broadcast for a New York radio program last year. He then stated that he had been given assurance that the court would identify him as the missing heir.

CRITICS CIRCLE: Laurette Taylor this week received from Eleanor Roosevelt the Barter Theater Award for her performance in "Outward Bound." Miss Taylor, who had retired from the stage after her husband's death, made gracious reply . . . "In the theater," she said, "opportunity knocks almost every day—and I delayed opening the door . . . I've been in the shade a long time. It's nice being in the sun again . . ."

STATE LIQUOR AUTHORITY: McKesson & Robbins will lose its distribution rights to the Jack Dempsey brand of liquor. Jack is stepping out of that picture . . . District Attorney Dewey: Why all the front-page to-do last week about the "disappearance" of Sam Grossman—the man who was living with Dixie Davis, George Weinberg and Hope Dare in Philadelphia when they were arrested? His "disappearance" was reported in this space on March 31 . . . Newspaper Guild: Contrary to all reports, P. M., the new evening tabloid, as yet hasn't hired a single employe . . . W. S. Gifford: Mayor LaGuardia ordered the removal of all extension phones at City Hall.

BROADWAY ASSOCIATION: Charles Adler, of the Yacht Club Boys, went to Lindy's the other night and saw the preparations for the new annex . . . "Why don't you alphabetize the new quarters," Adler suggested, "and have an 'A' section for acrobats, 'B' section for banjoists, 'C' section for clarinet players, etc.? You know your customers. They might like it" . . . "Maybe I'll do it," Lindy agreed. "Then I'll need this entire big place for the 'H' section" . . . "What's the 'H' section?" asked Adler, "harmonica players?" . . . "No," Lindy explained, "'has-beens'."

Bronte Drama Opens Its Run At Columbia

'Wuthering Heights' Is Hailed Again As 'Miracle Film'

A living story is always modern, written 200 or 2,000 years ago. So "Wuthering Heights," of the crinoline period, is also circa 1939. It has the double appeal of the picturesque and the psychopathic.

Already "Wuthering Heights" is ranked among the top pictures of the year, both in audience and critical appeal. Its long run at the Palace is naturally succeeded by its current Columbia engagement. Reports from all over the country show similar success. Practically, it's a miracle picture, with highbrows and the general public agreed.

Hollywood will learn things from "Wuthering Heights" and its tremendous public appeal. First, it should learn to respect the public and its integral understanding. Second, third and fourth, come the same things. The public can likewise learn things from "Wuthering Heights," a story written a century before its time—a story full of the unmentioned implications of Freud and Jung. Still such a story as to reach every heart. It is a story full of unnamable implications, but simple as life itself. That's why folks crowd to see it, why its every fadeout is accompanied by coughs, snivels and reaching for hankies. And, goodness knows, the picture is not essentially sentimental. There's a certain "escape psychosis" about it at the last. That's all. For the rest, it has the savor of pure horror.

Embraces Odd Beauty

The story of "Wuthering Heights" is not to be summarized. It encompasses the uncanny beauty of lonely moors and bitterly lonely souls, an atmosphere peculiar to the writing of the Bronte sisters. It has a love that is more poisonous than avowed hatred, it has a hatred full of tenderness. It has implied motives not to be noted by the casual onlooker. We're sorry that Dr. Freud hasn't written brochures on the involved psychology of the story.

But though "Wuthering Heights" may be a simple romance with fairy tale overtones (for the easy minded) or a fatal fable (for the tangle-loving cerebellum), it is still a great story, its principal credit due to the Bronte authoress who has slept quietly for a century or more in a quiet English grave. Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur adapted the story. Clever boys they are, but their cleverness this time was in their honour and close adherence to the spirit of a long dead lady.

Story of the Spirit

The story of "Wuthering Heights" is one of spirit, not of plot. But the performance of Merle Oberon is of the Bronte inspiration, especially when her jealousy, carefully concealed, blossoms out in a subtle sequence, again in her final scene that has the strange quality of the low-lying suns of death. This last argues that Oberon did clinical observation before facing the camera—and with well justified results. She gives you—death.

Laurence Olivier plays opposite Oberon as Heathcliff, and very finely, too. No one in Hollywood, with the possible exception of Francis Lederer, could have done the part so well. Almost better we liked Flora Robson as the old nurse, Geraldine Fitzgerald as Heathcliff's luckless and infatuated wife, dying while she lived.

Director Shoots First Scene First

It happened with the start of camera work on "Man About Town," the new Jack Benny picture, with Dorothy Lamour, Edward Arnold and a lengthy supporting cast.

The opening scenes are laid in the Benny suite in a smart London hotel, where much of the story unfolds, with a revue theater and an English country manor as other major settings.

Gets Thanks

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 12 (INS).—Allan Jones, who never rated top singing honors on the M-G-M lot because Nelson Eddy got there first has just signed with Paramount on a long term contract. His first is to be "Are Husbands Necessary?" with Madeleine Carroll and Fred MacMurray. Smart move on Allan's part, I would say, since Para has never had a singing male star under contract and he's sure to get better breaks than Leo, the Lion, found for him.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Yet it is amusing that he sings only one song in "Are Husbands Necessary?" His real break doesn't come until his second picture, "Victor Herbert," where he can run the scales to his heart's content, under the direction of E. H. Griffith. No, he will not play the Herbert role, but will be seen and heard as the romantic hero whose life is influenced by the beautiful Herbert melodies. In case you can't wait to find out who is producing these operas, Jeff Lazarus is the guiding genius of "Are Husbands Necessary?" and Andrew Stone of "Victor Herbert."

I told you some time ago that Richard Greene was getting the fourth largest fan mail on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot—and with Nancy Kelly coming along nicely, too, Darryl Zanuck has decided to co-star them in "Here I Am a Stranger." This is a college story, but with a serious background, for a change, and has none of the rah-rah or whoopee that usually goes with the goldfish eaters yarns. This won't be the first time Dick and Nancy have worked together, having recently completed "Stanley and Livingstone." William Seiter is set to direct "Here I Am a Stranger," which starts immediately.

After barring "The King and the Chorus Girl" for two or three years, the British censors have finally lifted the ban on the Merwyn Leroy picture and okayed its release under the new title "Romance Is Sacred." Of course, staid Britishers are trying not to notice Fernand Gravet's great resemblance to former King Edward, or any similarity in plot to his romance with a commoner. The censors are still forbidding the use of Gravet's stills outside the theater—or the use of his picture in the papers—but they tell me the British public is wildly interested and beating a well-worn path to the box office.

Chater in Hollywood: Radiant, indeed, was Constance Bennett with Gilbert Roland at the Troc opening. Yes, all is forgiven and forgotten and it's my belief that Connie will now actually obtain her divorce from the Marquis de la Falaise and marry Gilbert. The only thing that could possibly prevent the divorce is the financial arrangement the titled Frenchman is asking as part of his community property settlement. Connie is a smart businesswoman, and since she has made every dollar herself, she won't agree to any settlement she feels isn't right.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Errol Flynn planes to South America as soon as he finishes playing Essex; John Barrymore's Chicago interview when he heard about Elaine's divorce action was a howl. You can never get the best of Barrymore in a battle of wits; Bonita Granville, who has spent all her 16 years in apartments, is moving into a home at Toluca Lake; the new Troc is really swank, with its pink walls and not too bright lighting; the Duchess of Westminister, in a pink frock, was the guest of the Darryl Zanucks; Marelene Dietrich, in a very low cut gown, also in the Zanuck party, with the devoted Erich Remarque; Elsa Maxwell, who talks about her movie experiences with great gusto, seated next to Gregory Ratoff, her director. I accused her of red appling teacher.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 12.—Now that Bette Davis is playing Queen Elizabeth and Errol Flynn, Essex, in "The Knight and the Lady," it may interest you to know that living and working quietly here in Glendale is Marie Bauer, who will soon publish another book on the Baconian theory. She'll tell about her discoveries of the Bruton vault in Williamsburg, Va., last summer, which will be enlightening to every Shakespearian student and all Free Masons. She claims to have discovered a new code in the Shakespearian works of an anagrammatic nature. If her decoding is correct, which only time can prove, and his works are actually found in this vault, her claim is that Bacon was Elizabeth's first son by the Earl of Leicester, and Essex was her second son.

HOPPER

Miss Bauer's work is an unselfish labor of love, for the enlightenment of future generations, trying to prove that nothing in the heavens above or the earth below will ever be hidden from truth.

Understand Garbo is having more than her usual worry over the recent loss of that foreign market, where she always cleaned up. She never was a big seller in America.

Looks like the end of the golden rainbow for those foreign faces whose pictures made all their money on the other side.

Charles Boyer is smart. He's so friendly, adopted our ways, bought a home and is so accessible, we almost forget he's a Frenchman—consider him one of our own.

That handsome pianist, Dalies Franz, now that he's turned screen actor, gets his first real opportunity as Dmitri in "Balalaika," with Nelson Eddy and Ilona Massey.

Real star of that picture is Edward Ellis, who made such a hit in "The Man to Remember." Eddie's one of our really fine actors, but not much attention was paid him until he held out for two years for a good part. Now, R.-K.-O.'s put him under long-term contract. A tip to all you character men: if you can keep from starving, wait. The part will find you, and you'll make ten times as much, and won't have to work so hard.

WHAT'S EUROPEAN BEER GOT THAT GUNTHER'S CAN'T BEAT?

HOW CAN GUNTHER'S DO IT AT A DIME?

● How can Gunther's offer such high quality beer at the price of regular beers? There are three big reasons: 1. Gunther's makes hundreds of thousands of BARRELS of beer (the equivalent of over 90 MILLION bottles)... more than any other beer in this part of the country! This big volume means big savings on ingredient and brewing costs. 2. Most all of Gunther's is sold to folks right here in Maryland and D. C.... this means that no long haul shipping charges are added to the cost of Gunther's. 3. Most of it is delivered direct from the brewery to your dealer in our own trucks... another enormous saving, because breweries from other states have to pay as much as 30 to 50¢ per case to the wholesalers who handle their beer.

Put all these big savings together and you can see why folks around here can have Gunther's quality at a dime, whereas if you lived in New York, Milwaukee, St. Louis, etc., you would have to pay at least 15¢ per bottle for it.

HOW THE TEST WAS MADE

Founded September 1933
A Section of the INTERNATIONAL GENEVA ASSOCIATION
120 WEST 32nd STREET
NEW YORK, N.Y.

Baltimore, Maryland

Gentlemen:-

On last Thursday evening, at a dinner of our members, held in the Empire Room of the Hotel Lexington, a very thorough and comprehensive test was made to determine the relative merits of famous imported and domestic beers.

It was gratifying to see how the standards of brewing in this country have produced beer so excellent in taste, body, and color; that three domestic beers were virtually comparable in every way with three world-famous imported beers.

Thirty-seven experts, all master bar-men and wine stewards, engaged in this test, and none were permitted to know the names of the beers they tasted until the test was concluded.

You may also be gratified to learn that Gunthers was one of the highest ranking beers, receiving, as it did, the second highest number of votes for first choice. It was only exceeded by one world-famous imported beer in the opinion of these experts.

Yours very truly,
Harry Bozzard
Harry Bozzard, President

By this Pledge

Let it be known that Gunther's beer will always be brewed according to the highest standards of the art of brewing. We will never use any but the finest ingredients, and thus maintain the same remarkable dry lager quality that places it among the finest beers, domestic or imported.

The high cost of making Gunther's prohibits the giving away of premiums or prizes. All the value is in the Beer!

THESE experts were told that there would be 3 beers from the U. S. A. and 3 famous imports from abroad. Nothing else. They were not told which was which. Each man was asked to pick the beer he preferred to all the others.

The voting was close. They were all good beers. A European beer won. But Gunther's, the beer so well known in Baltimore and Washington came next and actually led the other two fine imported beers!

HERE'S HOW EXPERTS VOTED FOR 1st CHOICE

Import A	24.3	Import B	16.2
Domestic X (Gunther's)	18.9	Domestic Z	13.5

Heavy Responsibilities

Judges inevitably carry some of the heaviest responsibilities imposed upon its servants by the state: The public expects them to be not only judicious in their conduct on the bench but also exemplary citizens in all their private activities. For a judge is essentially an arbiter of the fate of those of his fellows who have run afoul of the law, and as such he must always live up to the high standards of his office.

Fortunately, the great majority of judges meet the exacting qualifications of their office as a matter of course. It is only in rare instances that members of the bench draw criticism upon their courts. When cases of that sort arise, however, there is double reason for thorough and impartial investigation. In the first place, judges as a class must be protected against unwarranted attack. And, in the second place, the process of administering justice must be safeguarded against abuse by the small minority of jurists who may prove careless or incompetent in the discharge of their duties.

Attorney General Murphy has done well, therefore, to order an investigation into conditions in the District Police Court. This inquiry is not necessarily to be considered a reflection upon any of the conscientious judges or other personnel of that court. On the other hand, if there is substantial evidence of unjudicial conduct or inefficiency on the part of any judge, the facts will doubtless be made known by the probe which is now under way. And if unpleasant facts are demonstrated it can be assumed that appropriate remedial action will follow swiftly.

Dr. Bowerman Continues

In unanimously re-electing Dr. George F. Bowerman as District librarian the Board of Library Trustees followed the logical course. For the past 35 years Dr. Bowerman has rendered efficient service in this post. The seasoned judgment and wide experience which he has accumulated during this period will be more valuable during the coming year than at any time since his first appointment.

Largely through the initiative of Dr. Bowerman, funds to begin the construction of a new central library for Washington have been included in the 1940 District appropriations bill. The librarian is more familiar than any other individual with this project and all that it implies for the community. It would be an obvious mistake to force his retirement, since both health and activity are unimpaired, while plans for this vital undertaking are being formulated.

It seems reasonable to assume, therefore, that President Roosevelt will grant Dr. Bowerman another extension of office when his present extended term expires in October. Certainly the value of his experience and judgment, in completing this library project, far outweigh any advantage that might accrue from rigid adherence to fixed retirement rules.

Puerto Rico's Governor

Admiral William D. Leahy, retiring chief of naval operations, is a man who combines exceptional administrative ability with a high degree of common sense. There is every reason to anticipate that he will do a first-class job as Governor of Puerto Rico, the post which President Roosevelt announces he will assume as soon as Congress adjourns.

This appointment, however, may give rise to the impression that the chief interest of the United States in Puerto Rico lies in the value of that island as a base for the defense of the Panama Canal. And it would be very unfortunate if, as future Governor of the island, Admiral Leahy's talents as a naval strategist were stressed without consideration of his skill as a civilian administrator.

There is, of course, every reason why the strategic position of Puerto Rico should be taken into account in considering ways and means of strengthening our defenses in the Caribbean. But this should never be permitted to overshadow the fact that the fundamental problem of Puerto Rico is how to adjust its internal economy so as to provide an adequate livelihood for its dense and teeming population.

The present Administration has been grappling with that problem. But the solution is still far from sight. As a result, Puerto Rico remains a hotbed of dissension, manifesting itself in recurring periods of turmoil and a chronic state of discontent.

As Governor of the island, Admiral Leahy will have no easy row to hoe. The post will require the full exercise of his unusual talents. But his task will be even more difficult if the Puerto Ricans are given the impression that the United States is interested in them primarily because their island is perfectly situated to control the entrances to the Caribbean.

In Place Of Subsidies

Defeat of Senator Bankhead's proposal to subsidize cotton exports ought to be a signal for thoughtful reconsideration of the Administration's agricultural policy, especially as it applies to this staple. The issue was clearly defined in the Senate debate. It is whether to adopt another stop-gap in a last desperate effort to make a faulty program work, or whether to abandon that program in favor of a more workable policy.

The Senate merely refused to amend its rules to permit the Bankhead scheme to become a rider on the agriculture appropriations bill. In effect, this was a defeat for the subsidy plan. But the bill, as passed by the Senate yesterday, contains $203,000,000 for "farm surplus removal," and about 25 per cent of that could be used for cotton export subsidies without specific authorization from Congress. Of course, the Administration would be ill-advised to embark upon a policy which the Senate has refused to sanction.

This situation seems to leave the Administration in a dilemma. As Senator George pointed out, cotton exports have fallen from 8,426,000 bales in 1932-33 to an estimated 3,500,000 for the current year. The Government has an enormous stock of cotton stored in warehouses, and a new crop of possibly 12,000,000 bales will soon be harvested. In arguing for an export subsidy Senator Connally pointed out that, if there is a loan on the new crop under the AAA law, American cotton will again be held above the world market price. He properly asks: Where are we going to sell this cotton?

To say, however, that this situation calls for export subsidies is an extremely dubious conclusion. Such bounties could not provide a real solution for the cotton problem and they would almost certainly give rise to more difficulties than they would alleviate. The Bankhead plan would lead, as Senator George noted, to an embargo on cotton from Brazil, Peru, Argentina and Egypt to prevent them from taking advantage of the artificial price that would be maintained in this country. And since subsidized cotton exports would give foreign mills a great advantage over the American textile industry, the Senator concludes that import quotas, "the most hateful form of tariff restriction," would have to be applied to every cotton manufacturing country.

In the light of the trade agreements program, stop-gap export subsidies thus boil down to an absurdity. The Administration could not take the lead in disrupting a free cotton market without indorsing a fundamental contradiction of policy. President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace may well thank the Senate for saving them the embarrassment of such a predicament.

It is not necessary to choose between a further piling up of cotton surpluses and the adoption of indefensible trade practices. The most simple and direct solution is to remove the artificial restrictions which make it so difficult for American cotton to find a market in other countries. The net result of the present policy of price-pegging has been to encourage the development of substitutes for cotton and to give a great advantage to foreign producers of this staple. In these circumstances it is not surprising to find Senator George, one of the best friends of the cotton industry, appealing for elimination of price-fixing loans, and for direct payment to the farmer of whatever benefits Congress may grant.

If our cotton export industry is to be permanently revived the defeat of export subsidies will doubtless have to be supplemented by adoption of this general line of approach.

Royal Parents

There is an old French saying that "to part is to die a little." Probably none realize this more acutely than the King and Queen of England, who have left their children behind on a trip which can scarcely be called a pleasure jaunt for the young parents.

The farewell messages they must have wished to leave with their little girls were drowned out by the ceremonial din of the departure. The King and Queen were sped on their way by naval guns and shore batteries, battleship cruisers and aircraft carriers. Members of the cabinet and officials in glittering uniforms were at Waterloo Station. Bands played and cheering crowds lined the streets. And up to the last moment the King and Viscount Halifax, the foreign secretary, conferred anxiously. It was reported that they both looked worried and the Queen seemed tired.

Since that day, stormy seas have rocked the Empress of Australia on its way to Canada, symbolic of the seas through which the British ship of state is sailing.

Perhaps, as is so often the case, the true state of mind of the King betrayed itself in a small gesture. When an escorting warship turned back to England, a cask containing mail, including parental letters to the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, was thrown overboard and picked up by the battleship. When it signaled success, the King responded with a broad smile.

The deference which is paid to royalty had enabled him to send a special message, in his own hand from mid-Atlantic, to his daughters. There was some compensation for a royal family in which the weight of the adjective sometimes interferes with the value of the noun.

Threats From Within

Without debate and without publicity the House recently passed the Dempsey bill, providing for deportation of aliens advocating any change in the American form of government. Last week, by an impressive majority, the House also approved the Hobbs bill, which authorizes internment for an indeterminate period of certain classes of aliens subject to deportation but unable to obtain passports from their native countries.

These are only two of many bills now before Congress which constitute a threat to the civil rights and liberties of alien residents. There are, for example, bills requiring the registration and finger-printing of aliens, and the deportation of aliens who have been on relief for a year. There is also a bill providing for the deportation of aliens who do not take out citizenship papers within a year as well as proposals to ban all immigration and to cut quotas drastically.

Under the present relief act aliens have already been deprived of the privilege of holding WPA jobs, whereas at first need alone was the test of eligibility. This change of policy, making proof of citizenship a condition of WPA employment, is indicative of the increasing pressure being brought to bear upon aliens either to become American citizens or to get out of the country.

There may be justification for excluding aliens from Federal relief work when American citizens are without employment. But there is no valid excuse for repressive legislation of the type which the justly named National Emergency Conference has been called upon to combat. Convening in Washington today, that conference, representing 150 different organizations, will discuss pending measures which are not only a menace to aliens but a threat to the freedom and security of American citizens as well.

The sponsors of the conference are men and women who have distinguished themselves in law, science, social work, and the academic professions. The speakers have been recruited from many different fields of activity. Prominent among them are Mgr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; Dr. Harold C. Urey, Nobel prize physicist; Senator James E. Murray, of Montana, and John Brophy, director of the C. I. O.

The strongest defense of our form of government lies in a firm stand against those misguided patriots who assume that democracy can be preserved by tyrannical procedure. The laws against sedition and crime which apply to citizens are also applicable to aliens, and should provide sufficient protection against subversive and criminal activities of all residents. To threaten with deportation aliens who indulge in criticism of our institutions, or to detain aliens not charged with any crime for unreasonably long periods, is to deprive them of fundamental liberties which our Bill of Rights guarantees to all.

The National Emergency Conference has not been called any too soon. Its sponsors are justified in saying that the bills directed against aliens "point toward universal police surveillance and State regimentation of every one of us." They are calculated "to set man against man, to sow the seeds of race hatred and discord among us, and to split and divide the American people."

Psychopathology Of Swing

From the Richmond News-Leader.

Swing music drives some people crazy. To find out what swing does to insane people, Vincent Lopez recently took six of his band out to a Brooklyn hospital and chose for an audience about 30 patients who were suffering from the depressive stage of maniac depression.

Any swing fan would have anticipated the results, but the doctors were startled. One patient, disturbed by the strains of an old melody as the piece was "swung," jumped up and sang with the band. This was considered an instance of transition from depression to mania.

Interesting as was the phenomenon to the hospital, the thought that jitterbugs all over the country may work into near-mania is frightening. Perhaps Vincent Lopez holds a key for which psychiatrists have been groping. Does swing music offer a natural testing medium for insanity? The subjects are not conscious of observation. If swinging Bach brings expressions of delight to a juvenile face, it would indicate definite symptoms of schizophrenia. A haunted look in the eyes of other listeners as the band played "Hold Tight" might suggest paranoia. Speechless, statue-like ecstasy following "The Big Noise from Winetka" might betray those suffering from katatonic fits.

Mr. Lopez must know that every year seven out of every thousand go insane, and that some authorities predict all mankind will be mad in 14,000 years. "Swing" may speed the catastrophe.

Peace Lovers

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congressmen will be called upon to vote on the revision of the neutrality law in a short time. To many of the responsible legislators the cash-and-carry amendment may seem most acceptable. For in appearance it answers two purposes. One is to help the democracies, while the other is to keep this country from being involved.

It is argued that the cash-and-carry plan would benefit England and France because these two nations have the money to pay for and the ships to carry the necessary purchases in time of war. Anyone who believes that is under the presumption that either German planes will not attack and sink these ships or England and France will be in a position to fight off these inevitable attacks. But, the question is, Can they?

It has been conceded that Germany has a superior air force. And with this powerful weapon Germany would have an excellent chance to prevent these ships from reaching England and France. The Spanish War should have taught us that such thing could be done—very effectively, in fact.

Indeed, we want to help the democracies by selling them supplies, but these supplies will never reach their destination. Is that helping them?

According to one school of thought the United States can keep out of war if we treat both belligerents alike. The cash-and-carry proposal appears fair, but it implies potential aid to the democracies. And this implied aid is only a halfway measure and may even turn out to be an empty promise.

The best way to keep out of war is to prevent it from happening. The logical step to take is to warn the aggressors that they won't get any help from us. Of all the amendments, Senator Thomas' plan points toward that direction, hence most acceptable. It deserves the wholehearted support of all peace lovers.

Human Interest

To the editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of May 7 you ran an editorial on the Self-Help Exchange. No doubt, this helped satisfy the appetite of some socially conscious individuals. However, from the standpoint of the interested persons it doesn't go quite far enough. An article included on the editorial page can hardly be expected to disseminate information of a human interest nature.

For that reason might I suggest that since a large number of your reading public is made up of people to whom a human interest story appeals more strongly than anything else that you devote more time and space to explaining the functions, the programs, and the relationship of agencies such as the Self-Help Exchange to the entire community? You would be absolutely 100% correct to tell me that the tie-up between the exchange and the community was made in forementioned article. My cry is that more space should be devoted to explaining the work of such agencies as the Vocational Rehabilitation Service, Goodwill Industries, Salvation Army and similar agencies. As a matter of fact, an explanatory series might be run.

It seems to me that articles such as these would have far-reaching effect. People who might be able to utilize such services would be made aware that they exist. Other people who know little of such organizations and have the will and capacity to help might be induced to give. I throw these things out merely as suggestions; I have no personal ax to grind.

If We Had

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The slogan "We will not go to war" by its continued reiteration without any action to keep us out of war has lost its force and usefulness. Also, the do-nothing policy — or, worse still, the lack of harmony and agreement among the Senators and Congressmen—is doing a great deal toward making war more possible.

If we had pointed the League, Germany would never have dared to act as she has. Granted that the treaty was too harsh, we know that if Wilson's hands had been upheld by his own country the treaty would have been modified.

But no—isolationism and political jealousy brought the world to its present state!

And even after our stubborn, selfish and short-sighted refusal to join the League, we were given another chance to redeem our honor and to help ourselves as well as the world. France made a plea asking if we would join with England and come to her defense if she were attacked by Germany. This was not only never presented to Congress for debate but no reply was made to France for a long time and no notice whatever taken of it.

If you doubt this statement you will find it is true and can be verified.

Of course, it would never have been necessary for us to go to the defense of France, as Germany would not have lifted a finger or a gun against France with England and the United States standing with her.

So since then Germany has had reason to think she need fear nothing from this country, that is, up to the time of Roosevelt's letter. But it is pretty plain now to all intelligent people who read that Germany's opinion of our policy has changed.

Reorganization

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President's reorganization programs are designed to promote efficiency in operation and savings in cost of Government. The savings in the cost of Government, in a large measure, will result from reduced personnel. Speaking plainly it means that some Government workers will lose their jobs. On the other hand, a few new jobs will be opened.

Although it would not be logical to object to a reorganization plan of this type, it does seem that some consideration should be given to the employes who are about to be dismissed. Probably they will be given adequate notice and maybe arrangements will be made for a portion of them by transfers. My question is "How is the employe himself assured by the Administration that he as an individual is treated fairly?"

It does seem that in these problems of notice of layoff and transfer the Administrtaion cannot be expected to know just who should get the ax or to consider at great length the relative merits of several thousand employes. It is clear that only the employes themselves can in the last analysis determine these questions satisfactorily.

It is the Federal workers' unions which can insure to each employe a sympathetic understanding of his position, and further, that if he is wronged, strong, militant steps will be taken to adjust his grievances.

Government Work

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a constant reader of your admirable paper, may I take the liberty of making a few comments, as a Government employe, on Mr. Mark Sullivan's excellent article entitled "U. S. Need of Zealots."

While I agree that there are many half-hearted workers in the Government service, this attitude is largely due to the prevailing code and system in Governmental departments." The appalling red tape in force completely paralyzes any effort for more efficient operation, and constructive criticism is instantly suppressed. "Don't stick your neck out" is a well-known watchword.

Coupled with this severe restriction is the attitude of some petty officials toward their immediate employes. Many of these men have previously failed in private business and are often heavily in debt. Nearly all have been forced to accept Government jobs for a living, but secretly resent the necessity and yearn to get back in the business world, with its lure of "big money." Individual ability and efficiency are secondary considerations and are generally swamped by personal prejudices.

Small wonder, then, that there are so many half-hearted workers in the Government service. Some are crushed by the overwhelming obstacles to advancement; others nurse in silence their feeling of resentment, while many have no ambition and are simply contented to draw their pay checks. The merit system is theoretically in force, but actually functions only feebly. The higher officials are not in close touch with the minor employes and are either indifferent or ignorant of the true conditions.

Some people, of course, will say that these statements are merely the expression of a disgruntled Government employe and do not represent a true picture of conditions in general. As a matter of fact the writer is perfectly satisfied with his present position, and the situation described is simply the result of his observations. No doubt there are some offices where the servile attitude is not required and where merit and fair play prevail.

Hobbs Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We were very happy to see your editorial of May 8 attacking the Hobbs bill. The professional patriots are perhaps the most dangerous threats to the democracy they profess to love and cherish. They are also among the most difficult to criticize, for they merely wrap themselves in a flag and thereby persuade many persons they are sincere patriots.

Fortunately it is becoming more and more apparent that the flag that some of the alleged patriots clutch to their bosoms is the black flag of Fascism. Your editorial comment on the Hobbs bill will help clear the smokescreen that these people have raised.

Recalled Past

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of May 7 there appeared a column about Rudyard Kipling.

I recall that the same writer at an earlier date had written about Bismarck.

I enjoyed these and have wondered whether newspapers do not generally forget that "the past is prologue" and adhere too closely to current happenings.

After reading the column I sensed that I was tending to overlook the recent past. I am wondering whether it would not be possible to continue these columns.

Chess

THE LATIN professor and the mathematics instructor gazed intently at the chess board. Then the former broke the silence.

"Nihil obstat," he said, and took a knight with a long lunge across the board with his rook.

Freyling, who had just stepped into the Faculty Club, looked on for a moment in obvious distaste.

"Chess," he observed, "may conceivably be a form of recreation for some people. But as for me, I would as soon play chess for amusement as I would add up numbers on passing freight cars."

This last was a double dig at the mathematics instructor, who, campus rumor had it, retired to the town freight yards for exercises in lightning calculation when the world was too much with him.

My aversion to what is reliably reported as a good game, continued Freyling, would be a hangover from my father's training. My father, you must know, was in his way a great and a good man but a gentleman of the old school—a school so old that its course of instruction was outdated even for the time in which he lived, much less for the world into which he brought his sons.

Father was a minister, but he got there the hard way. First he obtained a law degree, and with it, a fancy repufation as the nineteenth-century equivalent of what you call a rounder. Further, he brandished in his day the deftest sword of any university town in Bavaria. How he got religion I don't know, but he did, and left for Ceylon as a Lutheran missionary.

He was there in 1871, when word came of the creation of the new German Empire. Although a Bavarian, father was more Prussian than the Prussians, and hated them accordingly. When he was told to take an oath of allegiance to what he consistently referred to as the Bismarckian abomination, his rage was reported to have withered half the tea plantations in Ceylon.

He sent back to Berlin instead of a promise of fealty, a message so scorching that it found its way to Bismarck's very desk, probably as a noteworthy example of eloquent invective. At any rate shortly thereafter my father packed himself up, bag and baggage and made his way to Wisconsin, along with 30 or 40 of his Lutheran flock.

Although Bavarians are supposedly more easy-going than their northern brothers, father, as I have said, had the Prussian temperament, and with it, no sense of tact. He was constantly embroiled in local political and evangelical brawls, to his keen delight and to my mother's incessant worry.

Once, I recall, he was warned that the community had enough of him, that he had 24 hours to leave town and that if he appeared on the streets he would be neatly exterminated. I remember the fine figure he made next day, striding up and down the main street from dawn to sundown, with his Prince Albert coat hobbling in his long strides, and the wind plucking at his high hat. The only ill effects he suffered were blisters from the unwonted exercise.

Every day, without fail, father set aside an hour, during which he read, in equal doses, 15 minutes of Hebrew, Greek, Latin and Tamil. He did this for sheer enjoyment, not out of any snobbishness, ostentation, or affectation. That was merely the way he had been taught to derive his amusement and relaxation.

In his mind, that was the way every gentleman enjoyed himself. Furthermore, every gentleman played chess. I don't think it was ever clear in father's mind whether one played chess as a mark of his gentlemanly position or for simple amusement. He undoubtedly did it for both and never questioned the fact that his sons would do the same. Chess was a part of the gentleman's education.

Therefore, every day my brother and I played chess with father. We were required to play until we had beat him three games. And during the course of the game we spoke Latin, because a gentleman and a scholar speaks Latin.

For two long years we grimly attacked the chess board and the dead language after luncheon, while my brother and I enviously watched our friends tear up the Wisconsin countryside outside the window.

At the end of two years I beat my father for the third time. I have never played chess or spoken Latin since.

"Tibi seria, tibi metis," said the Latin professor, gently replacing his opponent's queen with his own bishop.

"Damn," swore the mathematician.

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

New Deal's Publicity

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, needling the press again, which is fair enough, says that in some communities loudly proclaimed untruths or greatly exaggerated half-truths may be overtaken only through the radio.

I go along with the President in that, but insist that he himself spoke a half-truth there, because he knows that no single paper or chain of papers ever had half the influence in this country that Charles E. Coughlin possessed when he was on top, and that vicious liars who deal in untruth and innuendo enjoy a degree of license on the air which is unthinkable in the papers and equaled only in the halls of Congress, where every member has a license to lie and slander.

The President failed to say, as he should have said because he knows it to be a fact and the other half of his position, that untruths may be more loudly proclaimed and half-truths more effectively exaggerated on the air than on paper, and that the combined press of the United States, if it were possible to obtain unity on any issue in a free press, could not overtake such a liar as Adolf Hitler, who obtains his best effects by radio and uses the press only as an auxiliary. He knows, also, that a Coughlin, a Huey Long or a President is libel-proof by contrast with an individual or corporation operating a million-dollar newspaper property, and that radio orators, once they attain to a certain degree of prominence and influence, may acquire a privilege to vilify and incite commotion by raising the issue of free speech if they be curbed.

Other Side Never Given by Politicians

MR. ROOSEVELT also said that the people have a right to expect their Government to keep them supplied with sober facts in every possible way. That is a tricky statement which makes no provision for the important element of truth in the presentation of matter which a partisan government may choose to regard as sober facts. He knows, and every journalist knows, and the Communist and Nazi-Fascist journalist knows best of all, because they use that method exclusively, that it is possible to class-angle sober facts. And I hope he doesn't expect anyone to believe that his Government ever would take the air to present sober facts which would bring discredit on his Presidency or any of its undertakings or its important members.

Politicians, like lawyers, never give the other side of a question, and a Government composed of politicians who in many cases are also lawyers, and in some cases either Communists or "fellow-travelers," could not be relied on to present sober facts. Who then would overtake loudly proclaimed untruths or greatly exaggerated half-truths? Who could command sufficient time on the radio to overtake partisan propaganda matter discoursed daily under Government auspices, and what individual or group would have the prestige to convince the people that the Government had told untruths or half-truths?

New Dealers Hire Journalistic Failures

ON THE SUBJECT of the veracity of the press it should be mentioned that there are many embittered ex-journalists now spotted around in the New Deal in Washington who stopped at their own business and hate the profession at which they failed. So the New Deal, it may be seen, is not wholly against the American press, but respects and gives influential employment to persuasive wanglers who can be relied upon to praise their meal ticket and harass the papers which couldn't use them.

One hears occasionally that editors and newspaper writers are ink-stained prostitutes. Passing that question, is it fair to ask whether Mr. Roosevelt or any of his bureau chiefs would publish, on the air or in print, any material prepared by any of the New Deal journalists which presented "sober facts" in an uncomplimentary way and how soon that free soul would be canned for cause?

5-Point Program Suggested to Aid Consumers

By the Associated Press.

Donald E. Montgomery, consumers' counsel for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, outlined to the Federal Monopoly Committee yesterday a five-point program for protecting consumers.

Speaking at conclusion of a three-day hearing on consumer problems, he urged that the committee:

Authorize some Government agency to establish standards which would describe the quality and usefulness of consumer goods.

Investigate all commodity rating agencies.

"Eliminate confusion and deception" by standardizing food package sizes.

Study the effect of resale price maintenance legislation upon retail prices.

Investigate the cost of distributing consumer goods in general.

The testimony of previous witnesses "clearly demonstrated," Montgomery asserted, "that in the absence of uniform standards, individual consumers have no way at all of knowing what they are buying."

A Brussels dispatch to the paper said it is "believed the Prince is in disgrace" because of his privately-expressed disapproval of certain Fascist methods.

Deputies Back Daladier's Foreign Policy

Premier Gets 375-230 Vote Despite Fight On Domestic Stand

By John Elliott.
Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, May 12.—The Daladier government received the indorsement of the Chamber of Deputies today on its policy of organizing resistance to the dictators, by 375 votes to 230. This majority of 145, imposing as it is, does not reflect the unanimity of French public opinion behind the measures of national defense now being carried out by Premier Daladier.

It is no exaggeration to say that if the decision of the Chamber had been taken on foreign policy alone, the Daladier cabinet would have obtained the suffrages of all the deputies.

"I Think Only of France"

This was shown by the applause that swept the Chamber this afternoon when Daladier sat down after winding up the two days' debate, with his plea, "I do not wish to say a word as a party leader. I want to think only of France—our France, which is in danger, but against which nobody can prevail because she is strong, united and determined."

But the resolution of confidence implied support of the ministry's financial and economic measures. These, the Socialists and Communists refused to swallow and so voted in opposition.

Former Premier Blum begged the government to leave out all allusions to financial laws, and to let the House vote solely on the government's foreign policy, so that the world might have a demonstratiion of French unanimity on this point.

"If it is a question of showing to France and the world that in the domain of foreign policy the unanimity of France has been achieved, the government will not miss one of our ballots," declared the Socialist leader. "If the Socialists refuse to vote for the motion of confidence, it is solely because the attempt is being made to impose on them a financial policy of which they do not approve."

Refuses Blum's Plea

But Premier Daladier took the position that his foreign, military and financial laws formed an indivisible bloc of measures, all concerning the national defense. He refused to dissociate himself from the work of his finance minister, declaring that he could not "remain silent on the meritorious work of Paul Reynaud without losing the esteem of innumerable colleagues.

Blum told the chamber that, in his opinion, the sole chance of saving peace now consisted in convincing Hitler and Mussolini that the "attitude of England and France is entirely sincere and a new act of aggression against a nation would not be accepted by them."

Hamilton Blames Scare on Roosevelt

Charleston, W. Va., May 12 (INS).—President Roosevelt, to a large degree, is responsible for war hysteria in the United States, John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, charged before a Republican rally here tonight.

Calling for drastic reduction in Federal expenditures, revision of the Wagner labor relations act, removal of deterrents to business in the tax laws and other reforms, Hamilton said:

"First and foremost, in this period of war hysteria, for which I believe the President of the United States himself is to a large degree responsible, is ot keep the United States out of war. From my conversations with a large number of our organization, I am satisfied they appreciate that the election of 1940 will determine the very existence of our form of government."

Lothian On "Union Now"

By Penn Kimball

He, Too, Favors Confederation

Oxford, England.

AMERICANS curious to know more about the political views of the Marquis of Lothian, Britain's new Ambassador to the United States, are noting with interest his current advocacy of the policy "Union Now" as set forth in the book of that name by Clarence K. Streit, former New York Times correspondent at Geneva.

Campaigning for the idea of an immediate sovereign confederation of democratic nations to preserve peace, Lord Lothian is at present organizing support in the British Isles for this international movement based on the lessons of the American federal experiment. Declaring that "Streit's book has defined the central issue of democratic states for the future, the substitution of international organic unity for conflicting national sovereignties" the Ambassador-designate, in a recent conversation, defined such a plan "as the only permanent way to defeat totalitarianism."

Citing Lincoln's Gettysburg Address as the classic statement that State's rights can only mean the ultimate end of individual freedom, Lord Lothian asserted that "the demon of sovereignty drives nations inevitably back to poverty, strife and war. "The American Constitutional Convention," he declared, "is lasting testimony to the need of a common assembly to settle peaceably the problems of disjoined states."

Faced with the alternative of a European system of sovereign states and thereby living in the jungle where armed strength is the only thing that can determine policy in the end, the fathers of the American Constitution wisely chose the course of pooling individual sovereignties in a common organism of national freedom."

TO MEET the immediate threat of totalitarian aggression, Lord Lothian, who recently resigned his post in the Chamberlain government, is lending his full support to a collective front of peace-loving nations. In such a combination, he believes, the participation of the United States might well prove conclusive. "As Mr. Lloyd George's personal secretary during the World War," he explained, "I am well aware of the decisive character of America's intervention in 1917. I think that I can say with authority that there was no way in which the allies could have expelled the German armies from France and Belgium had not America contributed her military and financial assistance. It was only the disruption of this unity after the war and the resumption of a world of conflicting sovereignties that has brought us again to the anarchy of power politics."

But, in the opinion of the new Ambassador, necessary as it may be now, collective co-operation of sovereign nations provides no permanent solution to the problem of peace. "From a military point of view," he observed, "the issue at Munich was that there was no way to meet the overwhelming German power directed against Czecho-Slovakia except by means of a general war. The policy of the democracies at the moment is to muster sufficient power at specified points to deter aggressive action at these points. Unless we can do this, we will be faced again with the agonizing question of whether or not we are willing to plunge whole nations into a catastrophic war to prevent, for example, a German city like Danzig from returning to the Reich.

"It is this competition for power which a reconstructed confederation of nations seeks to avoid. A league like the old one, based on national sovereignties, will always be an instrument of power politics, because it can never alter the status quo, it can never limit economic nationalism, and the only instrument of pressure, in the last resort, is war waged by individual nations."

THE EVOLUTION of democracy, argues Lord Lothian, has passed through three significant historical phases. The Greek city-state gave the world the idea of democratic government for small communities, the English representative principle extended it to nations, and the American settlement of 1789 inaugurated the federal principle as the basis of continental freedom. The next step is to see whether it can resist the alternatives of Marxism or Fascism by pooling an international sovereignity that will make democracy workable on a world-wide scale. Such a solution can only work out in response to events, but is no more impossible than the gigantic realignments that took place in Russia and Turkey after the war. "Can we rise to the call of this opportunity? is the question that will decide the fate of the ideal of democratic freedom."

Facts Of Life About Beef

By Mark Sullivan

U. S. Cows Shamed

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT at his press conference Friday was in one of his positive moods. Positive and a little truculent—the air of a man who anticipates criticism and meets it halfway, maybe a little more than halfway.

Mr. Roosevelt said he understood some one of the newspapermen was going to ask a question about the Navy buying Argentine beef. Some of us wondered if perhaps some one had been told to ask the question, perhaps by one of Mr. Roosevelt's secretaries. We sometimes imagine, though we are never sure, that questions are thus "planted," so as to give the President an opening to say something he has on his mind. However, that is immaterial in the present case—it's a legitimate bit of stage management whenever, and if, it is done. Anyhow, about this Argentine beef matter, Mr. Roosevelt pretty plainly anticipated there was going to be criticism, perhaps opposition in Congress, and he was going to have his say first.

He said yes, it was true the Navy had bought Argentine beef and he had authorized them to do it. He read us a letter he had written the Navy. The facts were:

The Navy had asked bids on a large quantity of canned beef. The lowest price for any American beef was 23 cents a pound. The price for Argentine beef was 15 cents a pound. Actually, the Argentine price was even lower, for the 15 cents includes 6 cents import tariff duty. This 6 cents would be paid by the Navy. It would be paid into the United States Treasury—which is just a bookkeeping transaction between the Navy and the Treasury. The net price of the Argentine beef to the United States Government would be 9 cents—as against 23 cents for American beef.

It's Better Beef And Lots Cheaper

MR. ROOSEVELT has the sort of mind that, in controversy, goes farther than merely to justify his point—Mr. Roosevelt double-justifies. Not only did he say the Argentine beef cost so much less. Besides, he said, it was better beef. He did not say merely better; he used words meaning it is vastly better, infinitely better, and he repeated the words, with strong emphasis. All Mr. Roosevelt's comparisons are habitally superlative.

He told the newspaper men to make the comparison for themselves. Whenever they go on a boating or camping trip, let them try both kinds of canned beef, and see how much better the Argentine product is. When asked the reason for the difference, he did not, as he might have been tempted to, to take a whack at American big business. He did not blame it on the American packers. He said he didn't know the reason for the difference—it just seems as if American cows don't produce as good beef as Argentine ones.

Knew Westerners Would Be Critical

IT WAS Mr. Roosevelt when he is over-emphatic and somewhat exaggerated in statement. But it was also Mr. Roosevelt at his best. He must have known, as every newspaper man at the conference knew, that his action would bring down on him criticism from Western representatives in Congress, and perhaps from Western farmers, whose votes are important. He must have anticipated this and reflected on it, and counted the cost, for it was obvious he had given thought to making his statement. It was no offhand recklessness. It was deliberate courage. On occasion, Mr. Roosevelt can "pussyfoot," or be silent, as adroitly as the best of politicians. When, as this time, he throws prudence out the window, he seems a more gallant person.

Finishing what he had to say about beef, Mr. Roosevelt was equally positive in his answer to a question about tax revision. On this subject Mr. Roosevelt's remarks included, as often, a little disquisition to the newspaper men about the technique of their craft. He said that past stories of theirs about his position on tax revision had told only half his position. This was, he said, like printing only the first half of a sentence. He admonished us that the other half of the sentence ought to be printed, too, and it ought to go into the "lead" of the story."

10-Minute Speech On Tax Revision

THEN Mr. Roosevelt proceeded to give us the whole of his position on tax revision. It was more than a sentence, it was a 10-minute disquisition; and it was very clear, detailed and positive. There was more of it than can be printed here. To undertake to summarize it might lead to repetition of the offense of printing only half a sentence. Briefly, and with anticipatory apology, Mr. Roosevelt is willing there be reduction of some taxes only provided there be increase of other taxes, so that the total amount of revenue shall not be less. If the taxes under discussion, the so-called "business deterrent taxes," such as undistributed surplus tax and capital gains tax, are reduced or wiped out, then there must be a corresponding increase in the rate of the ordinary straight corporation tax.

Amoy: A Warning

By Barnet Nover

Japan Strikes Again

THE INTENSE preoccupation of the Western powers with the European crisis during the past few years has provided a succession of Heaven-sent opportunities to Japan. She has capitalized those opportunities in the past. She is doing so now.

In most parts of China today, as both the American and British governments have bitterly complained, the Open Door which Japan, as a signatory of the Nine-Power Pact is pledged to keep open, has been slammed shut.

Foreigners continue to live and do business in the so-called treaty ports such as Tientsin, Shanghai, Hankow and Canton. But the Japanese have made it clear that they do so only by sufferance. At every point they find themselves hemmed in by Japanese bayonets and Japanese rules and regulations, their very presence resented as a symptom that the Western world has not lost all interest in the Far East.

HITHERTO, however, the Japanese, in seeking to destroy the foreign stake in China have resorted to strangulation but have avoided outright seizure. Now, even the latter step has been taken. At Amoy, on Friday, Japanese naval forces occupied the International Settlement located on the Island of Kulangsu.

The Amoy International Settlement is not and never was particularly important. Only a limited amount of trade has ever passed through that port on the coast of Fukien Province and that little has dwindled to the vanishing point during these last troublous months.

In itself, therefore, the occupation by Japan of the International Settlement at Amoy is of little practical importance. It is significant, however, as indicating the shape of things to come.

INDEED, Japanese spokesmen are very frank about it. One of them made it very clear that "similar action" might "be necessary" respecting the international areas at Shanghai "if a case like that at Kulangsu occurs." At Kulangsu, a Chinese notable had to have the misfortune of being shot at and wounded while in the vicinity of the Japanese naval commander who himself was unharmed.

Shanghai remains the biggest prize since outside the Japanese net.

The Japanese have done everything possible to isolate it. Access to Shanghai, both by land and by sea, is controlled by Japanese naval and military forces. Foreign businesses are subjected to excessive and overlapping taxes whose purpose is less that of securing revenue than of destroying those businesses. And over a long period Japan has put unrelenting pressure on both the International Settlement and the French Concession to accept a status of subservience.

What has saved Shanghai is, first, the presence at Shanghai of foreign troops and, secondly, the fear by Tokyo that any overt action might lead Great Britain, France and the United States to retaliate by barring their markets to Japanese goods, by cutting off the sale to Japan of indispensable supplies and by increasing the economic and financial aid to China.

THESE OBSTACLES are, however, not insurmountable. The foreign troops in Shanghai may not, when the test comes, actually bar the way to the seizure of the International Settlement and the French concession by the Japanese. And the powers with interests in Shanghai may also refrain from retaliating against Japan for anything she might do there.

Japan's action at Amoy, therefore, is both in the nature of a warning to Shanghai and a test of how far the Western powers will submit to the curbing of their rights and interests.

They had stood for a good deal up to now. They have even put up, with only formal protests, with such Japanese measures as the refusal to open the Yangtze River to other than Japanese ships, the seizure of Hainan and the occupation of the Spratly Islands, to which France lays claim. They may stand for more.

THE CUROUS fact is, however, that the extreme actions which Japan has recently taken, and which she now threatens to take, comes at a time when she is far weaker than she was at the beginning of the undeclared war. She is today very much more at the mercy of the economic pressure which Great Britain, the United States and France are in a position to exert against her than she was in July, 1937.

The war is now in its twenty-third month, but the end is still far off. Indeed, it is now the turn of the Chinese to take the offensive. And they have done so in a particularly exasperating manner. Operating in small guerrilla bands they have played havoc with Japanese concentrations. And the invaders have become so exasperated that they have again begun to resort to the barbarous device of bombing civilian populations, as they did when last week they staged an air raid on Chungking which resulted in the death of thousands.

IN VIEW of Japan's lack of success and her increasing weakness, the alarm which has been expressed over the possibility that Tokyo might make an offensive-defensive alliance with Berlin and Rome is fantastic.

Were Japan to do so, the action would be a gesture and nothing more. Japan is quite willing to capitalize the nuisance value of the totalitarian partners. She is not willing nor even in a position to pull their chestnuts out of the fire by going to war with any of the powers. She may do so when it suits her own purpose, not when it suits the purpose of Berlin and Rome alone. However, if it helps intimidate the democracies, possibility that Tokyo may enter the Berlin-Rome combination, Japan will not hesitate to keep that possibility dangling before the governments in London, Paris and Washington.

Japan Threatens to Occupy Anglo-U. S. Area in Shanghai

Nipponese Poised for Action Unless Chiang Supporters Are Ousted; Foreign Settlement At Amoy Is Taken Over by Navy

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), May 12.—Japan threatened today to occupy the Anglo-American area of the International Settlement and the French Concession if foreign authorities fail to make good their promise to oust Chinese nationalist terrorists who have been attacking Chinese friends of the Japanese.

To emphasize their threat, the Japanese occupied Kulangsu, the foreign area at Amoy, south China seaport midway between Shanghai and Hongkong, after the assassination there of Hung Li-hsun, chairman of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and a friend of Japan.

Hung was shot yesterday, allegedly by a member of nationalist Gen. Chiang's "blue shirt" terrorist organization, and died last night. Japanese immediately entered the foreign area and rounded up scores of Chinese suspects.

Yielded to Demands

A few hours earlier Anglo-American and French authorities had yielded to Japanese demands that they enforce the most drastic measures to prevent the foreign areas here from being used as a base of operations by any of Chiang's organizations.

Other developments in the Chinese-Japanese war included:

In Tokyo, British Ambassador Craigie called on Foreign Minister Arita and formally protested against the Japanese extensive air raid last week on Chungking, Chinese Nationalist capital, in which the British consulate was damaged.

It appeared that last week's Anglo-Japanese conversations, designed to reach an agreement on China questions preliminary to a general Anglo-Japanese understanding, had been dropped for the time, and that Japan again was leaning toward Germany, which has been attempting to obtain a general German-Japanese military alliance. The newspaper Asahi insisted that Japan had offered her good offices to Berlin as a mediator in the Polish-German dispute.

U. S. Ship Due at Amoy

The U. S. S. Bulmer was due at Amoy for a routine visit today and it was assumed the warship would stand by until tension there has relaxed. There are 7 Americans and 23 Filipinos in the Amoy foreign area.

Commenting on the Amoy assassination a Japanese spokesman said:

"It may be necessary to take similar action in Shanghai in event any grave case arises."

He said circumstances would determine whether Japanese forces would occupy the Settlement defense sectors held by British troops and United States Marines and the French Concession.

To Strengthen Blockade

"We would prefer, however, not to discuss such an unpleasant possibility," he added.

Thursday's proclamation by the Shanghai foreign authorities, warning all Chinese that they must cease pro-Chiang activities, was a "step in the right direction," he said, "but the principal point is whether or not the proclamation will be enforced."

A Japanese navy spokesman announced intensification of the naval blockade of China which imperial warships have enforced for more than a year. Henceforth, he said, the navy will attempt to prevent entrance into China of all materials and goods which might assist Chiang in his resistance to Japan. Food and medical supplies, which, "due to their chemical nature could be used for military purposes," were added to the contraband list.

("The club pro at the Helwan Golf Club, Cairo, Egypt, is Sheik Abdullah, who is teaching his seven sons to play golf."—News item.)

The Sheik Abdullah takes his stance
In flowing robes of white
Upon a tee in Egypt and Assails the pellet white;
How strange to come upon a sheik
Who doesn't ride a horse—
A sheik who thinks it quite enough
To roam a golfing course.

II.

The Sheik Abdullah's not the type
Seen in the movie show;
He doesn't roam the desert sands
While ladies crazy go;
Upon a steed he seldom rides,
A lady's man he's not;
He's happy only when he knows
His golfing form is hot.

III.

The Sheik Abdullah doesn't know
What "oomph" and glamour are;
His eyelashes are not so long,
But, boy, his tee shots are!
He hasn't any cupid-lips—
He lacks that baby stare,
But when he's on a golf course he
Has lots of "oomph" to spare.

IV.

The Sheik Abdallah is no "beaut"
With tiptop sex appeal;
He doesn't make the ladies rave
Or stir them head to heel;
He doesn't croon a desert tune
While lovely women faint,
But he's a redhot golfer, which
Is just what most sheiks ain't.

V.

This sheik he does not roll his eyes
Or gaze as through a mist
The only thing that bothers him
Is "Do I break my wrist?"—
He doesn't talk in platitudes
Or stare through optics blue;
He has but one concern in life—
That's "Do I follow through?"

VI.

The sheik—and this is what astounds—
He is a married man
With seven sons as little sheiks,
Each one a golfing fan;
He gives them lessons, one by one;
Away with all romance!
The Sheik Abdallah only wants
A good Egyptian stance.

VII.

Oh, Egypt! Egypt! How you've changed!
How strange it is to know
That any sheik of thine today
May be a golf club pro!
Ah, what a blow to maidens fair
To hear this desert song:
"Relax and keep that elbow in!
And, kid, you're standing wrong!"

Born Too Early

I do not care
For the World of Tomorrow;
I'd like to be around
In 2039,
When the city condemns
All the dilapidated,
Vermin-ridden,
Old Law Perispheres
To make room for a
Modern development
Of all-silk Hectagonometers.

A tiger escaped from the circus in Brooklyn and was caught in jig time without much trouble. It is likely that within another hour the animal would have given himself up. Tigers and lions are pretty tough, but they are always glad to get back into the cage after running smack up against big city civilization for a half hour or so.

Sailors Get Rum, King a Salute on His Anniversary

Aboard Empress of Australia, May 12 (Canadian Press).—King George VI received a 21-gun salute and in turn ordered an extra rum issue for men of the escorting cruisers Glasgow and Southampton today in celebration of the second anniversary of his coronation.

Promptly ta noon the cruisers ranged themselves on either side of the Empress and fired the salute in honor of the King, who with Queen Elizabeth is en route to Canada and the United States.

The King and Queen stood on the after deck with their suite and after the guns stopped booming the King had orders signalled to the cruisers to "splice the main brace"—which meant an extra issue of rum.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

Slimming the Waist Is an Inside Job; Exercise Does It

STYLES being what they were about 40 years ago, a girl has to have a neat and tidy waistline—but with none of that pinching, squeezing and shortness of breath that ladies used to put up with!

Probably the explanation of that continual rushing around with the smelling salts in those days was the inability of a lady to draw a full breath in her corsets.

Streamlining today is an inside job, done under one's own power. And a lot healthier it is, too! So, the first thing to do is to find out whether your waistline conforms to the styles, and the next is to exercise so that it will.

For that fashionable spare-rib look, it's not only the span around the waist, but the distance from the lowest rib to the crest of the hipbone that counts. If you can just span this distance with the thumb and middle finger, you're one out of a hundred—and you probably have a slim, fully extended midsection.

Slim by Exercise

Figure experts agree that you should not be able to pick up more than three-quarters of an inch of fat between thumb and forefinger at either side of the waist. And a third practical test is the difference between the bust and the waist measurements. If your waist is not less than 8 inches less than the bust, and your weight within 10 per cent of normal, the chances are that you are beautifully slim.

Those three tests are not too easily passed, but, as I have always told you, it is easier to slim the waist than any other measurement—if you will only do a few of the right exercises.

Here is an exercise that is both good and hard—but you want a slim waist, don't you? Sit in a straightbacked chair, facing the chairback, with knees anchored firmly at either side, and hold a long wand back of the shoulders, with the ends tucked in the crook of the elbows. When you are set, twist at the waist, first in one direction then in the other. If that doesn't take off the waistline inches, nothing will!

Concentrate at Waist

Standing up, hold the wand high overhead, width of the shoulders apart, and stretch. Then with the feet parallel, and holding hips still, twist at the waist to one side and bend down and touch the wand to the floor on the outside of the foot. Stretch again, and bend to other side. Do the exercise slowly, holding hips still and pulling up with the tummy muscles.

In both exercises, the movement is more or less concentrated at the waist, with hips and shoulders held still, the twisting movement of the trunk muscles is much more vigorous and effective. Remember to apply this same rule in your regular set of waistline slimmers.

Plan Wedding In Advance

SO YOU'VE said "Yes"—and already a bevy of questions flutter about your head—engagement etiquette, wedding details, reception plans! Answer them now and be a lovely, light-hearted bride.

How to announce your engagement? You may prefer to tell friends and relatives informally, by word or note. But if you wish to send notices to the newspapers—or announce the exciting news at a party your parents will give for you—or do both!—considerate to write intimates a few days beforehand. Send the notices to the newspapers the evening before your party announcement or on the same day. Should you ever send printed, engraved announcements to friends? Never.

As for what the bride should wear, what the bridesmaids should wear—that's determined largely by the type of wedding you choose.

At a formal wedding, with the bride in stately bridal gown and veil, the attendants wear dresses in key with hers. At an informal wedding, the attendant—usually only one—wears a simple dress or suit, as the bride does. Attendants buy their own costumes, though the bride often provides accessories.

At the reception, who's first in the receiving line? The bride's mother is first—and quite usual, correct for her to be followed by the bride's father, the groom's mother and father, the groom with the bride on his right, and the bridal attendants. Or the bride and groom may receive alone.

Send 15c in coin for our booklet, "How to Plan Your Wedding," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York City. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Last Minute Mother's Day Hints

Tomorrow you can tell your mother that you are still tied to her "Playpron" strings. Not so subtle, but awfully practical is the gift worn by the mother at left. This "Playpron" apron is made of smooth liquid latex. Its fresh, clean colors harmonize with the contrasting color of the swing pocket. For more formal dinners at eight, we suggest the gray silk-chiffon gown, worn by the gracious woman on the right. The elbow-length sleeves, high-shirred bustline and the white and wine posies caught at the V neckline will flatter any silver-haired matron

Mother's Day

Sister—Mother! Mother! Come here quick!

Mother—Wait till I turn the chicken. Say, you'd better remember to stir that mayonnaise——"

Sister—Oh, but here's Bud and Pearl . . . and Junior and the baby!

Mother—Oh, hello! Come on in—say, wait a minute till I wipe my hands . . .

Bud—Hello Mother! Here's a little box of candy for you. Say, do I smell fried chicken?

Mother—Say now, you oughtn't to have done this—

Pearl—Hello Mother. Here's a little apron for you.

Mother—Oh thank you so much! Just what I need!

Bud—Say, do I smell strawberry shortcake?

Junior—Grandma, I want a piece of cake!

Mother—In a minute, darling. Say, where's Dad?

Sister—Oh here he comes! And look what he's got! Lilacs! Why, he has a whole bush in his arms!

Mother—I do believe something's burning—oh, it's the chicken! And I bet that mayonnaise has boiled over!

Father—Here! Somebody come get these flowers!

Sister—Mother! Mother! See what Dad's brought you!

Mother—How perfectly beautiful! Wait till I wipe my hands. Sister, will you put them in a vase?

Junior—I want some candy!

Pearl—No! No! That's Grandma's candy.

Mother—Oh go ahead and open it and let him have a piece.

Sister—Why that's that Chett Tripper—you know the one's that's on his track team.

Mother—Sister, will you put another plate on the table? . . . Say now you people won't have any appetite left for dinner if you keep on eating candy.

Pearl—That's just what I tell them. Besides, there won't be any left for you.

Mother—Oh that's all right, I don't like candy—no what I mean is I'm really very fond of it, but I eat very little—

Sister—Mother, there's no place for Marjorie at the table.

Mother—Marjorie?

Sister—Yes, she's coming for dinner and then we're all going riding—

Junior—I wanta eat!

Pearl—Be still! We're going to eat in a minute.

Mother—Wait, I'll find him something to play with.

Sister—Say, I believe I'll go upstairs and put on my other dress.

Mother—Well, you'll have to hurry—

Bud—Say, do I smell corn fritters?

Mother—I must look at that chicken!

Pearl—I believe the baby's crying! I'll be back in a minute.

Sister (calling)—Mother! . . . Can I borrow those two-thread stockings I gave you? They go better with my dress.

Mother—All right—say I thought you were going to put the salad on the table?

Sister—I'll be down in a minute.

Mother—Come right in, Marjorie.

Bud—Have some candy, Marjorie.

Sister—Mother! . . . Can I open that perfume Orville gave you?

Mother—All right.

Junior—I wanta eat!

Mother—We're going to eat in a minute—if I can ever get things on the table. Oh, Sister!

Sister—In a minute! . . . Oh, say, Mother, do you care if I wear those beads Cousin Clara sent you?

Mother—No . . . Wait! Wait! Junior! No, no, don't touch!

Orville—Hello Mother! You know Chett.

Mother—Come right in, Chett. Bud—Have some candy, Chett. Orville—Say, we're hungry!

Father—There's someone at the door—Oh, it's a telegram . . . For Mother!

Mother—Wait till I wipe my hands . . . Now let's see . . . ALWAYS FIRST IN OUR THOUGHTS—THE MOST WONDERFUL MOTHER IN THE WORLD. BUD, ORVILLE, SISTER." . . .

How perfectly lovely—Oh, wait! I believe something's burning!

New Type Mattress

A really new mattress is actually a latex product but different from familiar rubber. This is a new material called foam—sponge. 'Tis said that sleeping on it is like floating on water, so resilient is it to every movement of the body. It is half air, as a matter of fact, and so very light to lift, though its porous construction makes turning unnecessary. Vermin and bacteria can't live in this type of mattress and dirt can't penetrate its smooth surface. Sounds too good to be true, but it's actually a reality.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman Loves Man Whose Boon Companions Are Odious to Her; Should She Marry Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My problem is triangular—one woman, one man, and the man's friends. I am a Protestant divorcee, with one daughter and a dependent mother who, in her peculiar way, adores me and detests any man or woman with whom I am associated for any length of time. Her failure to control her temper, and her readiness to make a scene, wherever she may be, if she happens to be displeased, has resulted in my staying away from her as much as possible. However, since she has no one else with whom to live, I have not been able to convince myself that I would be doing right in forcing her to live alone.

The man is a Catholic and wants to be married. Our religions, a slight difference in ages, and my mother's openly expressed dislike of him have combined to keep us from marrying, and we have tried to be just friends. When we are alone, he is the most delightful companion imaginable. He does not care to meet my friends, although apparently he likes those whom we have met casually, and has made a point of seeing them again.

Our bone of contention is the manner in which he chooses to spend all Sundays and most holidays, and the persons with whom he spends them. His invarjable companions on these days are two men and their wives. This man has a keen, analytical mind, but his two boon companions are uneducated, uncouth men. Their days are spent together playing like puppies, working the garden, wrestling, hopping in their cars and driving around and going to the beach to swim, all interspersed with large quantities of liquor. Such days always end in long poker sessions. The two wives appear quite contented just to sit around and watch these antics, and to prepare huge dinners which may, or may not, be eaten.

I have gone with my friend to spend a few hours only with these people, and have always been courteous to them. However, they do not like me (which may be my fault, although I am not accustomed to being disliked by anyone in any social stratum), and made it clear to my friend that they would prefer to leave me out of their frolics. I have always believed that a man who loved a woman would want to share his holidays with her—but in this case I am frankly told that I should spend my time with my own family or friends, as he is going to do what he choses. And he always chooses to do what these companions want him to do.

All this would seem to indicate that I am not so much loved as loving, and I have tried to give up all thought of association with him. We work in the same office building, however, and every day he comes in to see me, takes me to lunch (on a Dutch treat basis) and comes by after work. He is so nice to me on all occasions (except when these four want him with them) and professes to see no reason why I should not accept his attentions when he is ready to bestow them, that I can't get my bearings.

I have given up practically all of the men friends I had before this started—not because he asked me to, but because, loving him, I do not want to dine and dance with anyone else. I do not think that he has gone with any other girl, either, during this time. This is a terrible muddle, Miss Haworth, and if you can offer any solution I shall be eternally

GRATEFUL.

Ominous Storm Signal

DEAR GRATEFUL: It is traditional folk wisdom that "a man is known by the company he keeps." As long ago as the fifth century B. C., Euripides observed that "every man is like the company he keeps," and in the sixteenth century of the Christian era, Cervantes remarked the fact again in these words: "Tell me thy company, and I will tell thee what thou art." Also, Robert Burton, sixteenth century author of "The Anatomy of Melancholy," noted in his day that, "birds of a feather will gather together."

I think your quasi-fiance's predilection for the society of "uneducated, uncouth men," who spend all their leisure "playing together like puppies, gardening, wrestling, driving around," etc., all interspersed "with large quantities of liquor," may be accepted as irreversible evidence that he is, in essence, very much of a clod himself (see Webster's definition of clod: "that which in earthy and of little value, as the body in comparison with the soul . . .)."

And I think that your intrinsic inability to meet with such persons on common ground constitutes equally indestructible evidence that an insurmountable barrier stands between your personality and his. While some points of attraction undoubtedly do exist, their worth or significance is, in my opinion, automatically and overwhelmingly canceled by preponderant points of repulsion. I imagine the current alliance has grown out of a mutually sensed physical attraction which serves, in intervals of tete-a-tete companionship, to blind each other to the other's essential incompatibility on all remaining personality fronts. Added to this, I daresay, is your eager desire to be married (with this man the only insistent and halfway eligible candidate who has presented himself, since your divorce); and the man's desire, perhaps, to marry (as he would probably say) "a little above himself," or "a woman he can be proud of."

In other words, I think that each is animated by extremely shortsighted considerations of self-interest (including sensual self-indulgence) in entertaining the idea of marriage as a feasible proposition. I think that if you two were to marry, each would find his last state worse than his first. I think your marriage would be a "cat fight" episode from ill-starred start to early finish. I think the wisest thing you can do, from a self-preservative point of view, and by way of heading off trouble, is to accept the fact—which your own instincts decipher—that a tolerable union simply isn't in the cards.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, May 12.

EVER MEET a tattooed lady socially? Well, if you come to the Fair here, step right up and say howdy to Betty Broadbent, 25, pretty and as full of pictures as the Metropolitan Museum. She's some girl, this Betty is.

ALICE HUGHES

I wanted to know how tattooed ladies get that way—have wondered, in fact, pretty much since I beheld one at my first circus. I now know that it isn't just a whim or a love of art that causes a girl to have herself covered with portraits, American eagles and doves of hope. It's usually dollars and cents, or more eating-and-dressing money. Certainly it was in Betty Broadbent's case. She began professional life as a trick rider and roper—joined a show owned by her uncle when it passed through her home town, Miami. Betty liked it pretty well, but soon got fed up with only six months' work a year during the rodeo season.

So with malice aforethought she set about becoming a walking picture gallery. Everywhere the show stopped she looked up a tattooing genius and had some more curlicues etched. Now she has pictures everywhere but on her hands, forearms, neck and face, and she figures all this art work has cost her about $800 up to now.

Among Betty's masterpieces are portraits of Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh, Pancho Villa and a cowgirl friend of hers named Dollie. She also has a Hawaiian lady covering most of her right thigh. She likes the life all right, but I asked La Broadbent about its handicaps. "Well, I wear two pairs of stockings on the street, beige cotton below, silk on top," she says. "And I can't wear low-cut evening dresses, because Raphael's 'Madonna and Child' practically covers my back. And I can't go swimming on crowded beaches, and I love to swim." So it's not all pie to be Betty Broadbent—even though she is tattoo queen of the New York World's Fair.

A week ago we played host to Richard Elsasser, of Cleveland—all of 12, and a genius on the pipe organ, they tell me. He was here to play a concert on the enormous organ of one of our department stores. Richard gave his first recital at 10, in Trinity Cathedral in his home town, with a repertoire of 50 pieces by Bach. Some kid, hey?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—So tomorrow is Mother's Day, that comparatively new feast so beloved of the Nation's posy peddlers. Well, we all love mothers. And we don't have to send them flowers, for elegant boxes of candy, fancy boxes of salted nuts or preserved fruit, and even cakes in tins make nice gifts, too.

There Are Blues To Flatter Every Girl

Hollywood.—Every girl in the world, says Milo Anderson, is flattered by some shade of blue.

Milto cites his current assignment, "Give Me a Child," as proof. In the cast are golden blonde Gladys George, titian-haired Geraldine Fitzgerald, brown-haired Gloria Holden, and brunette Gale Page. Each one lists blue as a favorite color and has a shade of it that especially becomes her.

Pastel blues are good on Miss George. A Russian peasant dress she wears on the screen is baby blue sheer wool and has sleeves and necklines embroidered in other pastels.

Geraldine Fitzgerald's fair skin, green eyes and auburn hair are made to order for greenish blues, so Milo designed a two-piece suit of turquoise boucle for her to wear in the picture. She shows a love for navy, however, in her personal spring wardrobe.

Gloria Holden is at her best in such shades of blue as poudre and smoke. She spends most of her time in bed in "Give Me a Child" wearing a bed jacket of poudre blue angora. A matching crepe nightgown is sprinkled with rosebuds.

Although brunettes often shy at blue, no color is more lovely on Gale Page than a clear blue which accents her copper skin tones and blue-black hair. Her most striking dinner gown is Swedish blue crepe set off with an American Beauty rose corsage.

Kahn Party to Make Preakness 'Official'

'Morning Telegraph' Publisher to Give Breakfast Here

THE PREAKNESS at Pimlico, always an epic in the season's sporting annals, will draw the usual crowds of social notables over to Maryland this afternoon. And the news that Stanley Kahn, of New York, will give his annual breakfast party beforehand makes the whole thing seem official.

Mr. Kahn is prominently identified with the Morning Telegraph, classic among racing sheets, and the Preakness wouldn't be the Preakness without the large party he's been giving on this day for the past four or five years. The group will get together at 11 o'clock for breakfast in the Chinese room of the Mayflower before boarding the enormous bus chartered by Mr. Kahn to take them in style to the races.

The publisher has always reserved seven or eight boxes near the finish line for his friends. On the way over the guests in past years have chipped in $5 for a pool, but today, with over 30 planning to be present, there will probably have to be several pools. In the bus coming back to Washington, after the race, Mr. Kahn always produces packages of delectable sandwiches put up by the Mayflower to allay the pangs of late-afternoon hunger among his guests.

Number of Notables In Kahn Party

A number of Congressional celebrities will be included in Mr. Kahn's party, among them Senator and Mrs. Frederick Van Nuys; Representative Warren G. Magnuson and Representative Patrick J. Boland.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Senora de Martins will be along for their first look at a big American racing classic. Col. Francis Harrington, chairman of the Works Progress Administration, will be included in the party, and others going with Mr. Kahn are William Julian, United States Treasurer; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Thach, Mrs. Pearsons Rust, William McEvoy and his mother, Mrs. Katherine McEvoy; Miss Mary V. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer, Herbert Bingham, Fay Des Portes, United States Minister to Guatemala; Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja and Howard Vesey.

When Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr., pass up a big race, it's news. Both attended the Preakness last year, but today Mrs. Robert will go with her baby to her mother's estate on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and Mr. Robert is planning a week-end jaunt to the mountains.

Jouett Shouses To Be There

Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, who are Pimlico "regulars," will occupy a box at the Preakness, and will have with them, as they did last year, the former's daughters the Misses Marion and Elizabeth Shouse. Mr. and Mrs. Shouse are ardent race fans and maintain a small stable in Kentucky and Wolf Trap Farm, their country place in Virginia.

Representative Richard M. Kleberg, of Texas, has a special reason for being at Pimlico today, as his filly, Ciencia, winner of the Santa Anita Handicap, is among the entries. Mr. Kleberg is owner of the King Ranch, biggest in Texas. His wife is spending the week-end in New York, so will miss the race, but Mr. Kleberg will have with him his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kleberg, and their daughter, Miss Helen Kleberg, and a niece, Miss Lisa East, of Texas, who is studying at Gunston Hall this year.

Some Going to Delaware Show

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Carusi will be accompanied to the Preakness by Mrs. B. Lauriston Hardin, and they may be joined there by Alexander Hagner, of Warrenton.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Moran McConihe passed up the Preakness this year in favor of the Wilmington Horse Show, and are spending the week-end in the Delaware city.

The old wooden clubhouse of the Maryland Jockey Club, which overlooks the Preakness track, will be thronged today with well-dressed men and women attending the numerous luncheon parties to be given before the race. Racing is nothing if not democratic, and today's crowd will be a cross-section of writers, movie magnates, radio tycoons and horse breeders and trainers as well as social celebrities.

Miss Chang Wed To Kien-wen Yu

At a colorful Chinese ceremony at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the embassy, Miss Virginia Chang, whose father, L. N. Chang, was formerly Chinese Ambassador to Chile, was married to Kien-wen Yu, second secretary of the embassy.

No public announcement of their engagement had been made, so the news will come as a surprise to members of Capital society. The Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu-Shih, officiated at the ceremony in the presence of a few close friends.

Their wedding brought to mind the last such ceremony at the embassy, in June, 1938, when Miss Anna May Ing, daughter of a former Counselor of the embassy, was married to Tennyson Po-snun Chang. At that wedding an announcer called out each step of the ceremony, and took movies of the bridal scenes, from the reading of the service by the Ambassador to the low bows made by the bride and bridegroom to each other, to the spectators, and to their two friends who acted as "go betweens." The bride and her attendants wore cotton dresses, because silk gowns for sale in this country are largely imported from Japan.

After a honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Yu will reside in Washington.

Champlain last September, accompanied by her mother and younger sister, Jean.

While abroad, she visited France and Ireland, and took special courses in dramatics, music and ballett in London. Upon her graduation from Rooseveltt High School last year at 16, an honor student, Miss Walberg was offered scholarships to the College of New Rochelle and the Washington College of Music, but accepted the European engagement instead. Last spring she was awarded the prize by the French Ambassador Count de Saint Quentin as the best French student in a contest which included students of both public and private high schools. She expects to continue her studies in languages and dramatics this fall in Washington.

P.-T. A. Convention To Open Here Tuesday

'Training for Democracy' Will Be Theme of District Meeting; Mrs. C. D. Lowe Slated to Be Elected President Without Opposition

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

"Training for Democracy" will be the theme of the annual convention of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers to be held Tuesday and Wednesday in the departmental auditorium on Constitution avenue, where it took place last year. Mrs. C. D. Lowe, who has been nominated for president to succeed Mrs. Walter B. Fry, heads the slate of candidates to be elected without opposition on Wednesday.

Mrs. Fry will preside at the Congress, which has a membership of more than 17,000, exceeding that of many of the State parent-teacher organizations over the country.

Washington: City of Contrasts

Number Is Less Than Previous Year; Agencies Get Credit

This is seventh in a series of articles on social and health conditions in the Capital. The eighth will appear tomorrow on Page 5 of Section 3.

By Eugene Pharo.

Childbirth brought death to 66 mothers in Washington in 1937.

This was fewer than died the year before, although in both years the death rate for mothers, and for babies, was higher in the Capital than in the nation.

The improvement accompanied efforts by public and private agencies whose story will be told in tomorrow's article. It presents the brightest spot in an analysis of social conditions by census tracts made by the research department of the Washington Council of Social Agencies. Yet it is bright only by contrast.

Picture of Extremes

The council's study of neighborhoods in which lived mothers who died from puerperal—or childbirth—causes, contributes to the picture of extremes in Washington. For example, there were 59 tracts in which no mother died of childbirth causes in 1937. Of the 37 others, some had rates that were four and five times the national average.

In six tracts where the rate rose to 15 or more per 1,000 live births, in comparison with the United State's rate of 4.88 in 1937, there was a density of at least 60 persons per net residential acre, which is four and a half times the population density for the city as a whole. Two other tracts are among those with highest infant mortality rates, and three have such rates considerably above the city average.

Of the 66 mothers who died in 1937, 30 were white and 36 were colored. Of the tracts where such deaths occurred only two showed a rate better than the National average. These were 21, which is between North Capitol street and Georgia avenue, and above Gallatin street to Madison, and 47, which is bounded by North Capitol street, and Massachusetts and New York avenues.

Highest in Northwest

The three tracts that had the highest rate of puerperal death are near one another in the northwest section. In one of them, No. 28, which lies between Fourteenth and Sixteenth streets, above Harvard street to Spring road, the rate was based on the death of two white mothers. This tract has 3.1 per cent of colored population, 9 per cent of its dwelling units only are over-crowded, rentals average $47.74 monthly, the birth rate is 10.13 (which rate is composed of 9.68 for the white residents, and 24.49 for the colored), and the density 10.13 (which rate is composed of residential acre.

The other two highest rates are in tracts 31 and 34. The first lies above Harvard street, between Eleventh street and Georgia avenue to Park road, and the other below Harvard street to Florida avenue, between Georgia avenue and First and Second streets. In No. 31 the colored population is 73.8 per cent, and in 34 it is 94 per cent, according to the 1930 census. Rents average $35.59 in the first and $44.36 in the second. Ten and two-tenths per cent of the dwelling units are reported overcrowded in 31 and 9.8 per cent in 34. In the first, 9 per cent of the dwelling units are reported to have no inside toilet and bath, and in the second 28.8 per cent lack these facilities. In both these tracts the birth rate is almost the same as the national average.

Education For Cripples Held Lacking

Dr. Studebaker 'Deplores' Condition; Says Handicapped Child Is Forgotten

Educators from 28 States and the District gathered here yesterday to inaugurate an intensive drive to secure Federal assistance for the education of handicapped children.

Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education, told the administrative council of the National Society for Crippled Children of a "deplorable" lack of provision for "education for crippled children in the United States."

School systems in this country, he explained, have been built to fit the needs of normal children, "but recently we have become more conscious of the needs of the handicapped child."

Drawing attention to the pending Pepper-Boland bill providing Federal funds for the education of handicapped children, he remarked that "if enough people want such services from the Federal Government, they can get them."

Representative Boland (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, sponsor of the measure, informed the council, during the afternoon session at the Washington Hotel, that the proposal has been placed on the Senate calendar and shortly will come up for consideration in the House of Representatives.

Harry H. Howett, director of social service for the society, read a summary of answers to questionnairs sent to 39 State branches of the organization asking for information on their programs for the assistance of crippled children.

In his report he pointed out that "some of the newer societies are entering into some fields of activities which have not been found in the programs of the older organizations and which would seem to prove that a complete plan of activities has not yet been developed in any State."

Sixteen States at the present time have legislation pending for the provision of medical treatment, vocational rehabilitation, special education or occupational therapy for crippled children, he stated.

This morning Dr. Robert C. Hood, director of the crippled children's division of the Children's Bureau, will speak on "Social Security for Crippled Children in 1939;" Dr. W. F. Draper, executive officer of the Public Health Service, will discuss "Serving Crippled Children Through the United States Public Health Service," and Frances E. Shirley, chairman of the society's committee on discovery and enumeration of handicapped children, will present a paper on "Census of Handicapped Children."

In the afternoon, President Paul H. King of the society, will discuss the Fourth World Conference for the Assistance of Handicapped Children and reports of committee chairmen will be received.

D.C. Police Find Fugitive in Home Of New York Chief

Washington detectives yesterday captured a 24-year-old District fugitive after trailing his girl friend through six States to his New York hideaway.

The youth, Robert W. (Mickey) McManus, wanted here on a grand larceny charge, was trapped in the home of the chief of police of Laurel Hollow, N. Y., by District and Nassau County (N. Y.) police.

McManus, police learned, had been living at the police chief's home since last December, when he was released from District jail through a misunderstanding between District and Police Court officials. The chief, however, police said, did not know McManus was wanted in Washington.

Acting on a tip Thursday afternoon that McManus' girl friend planned to visit him, Detective Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon and Detective Robert Maghan trailed her to Laurel Hollow.

A moonlight serenade to visiting schoolboy patrolmen drifted over the Washington Monument Grounds last night from the Trombone Choir (left) from Altoona, Pa., and the Accordionettes (center). Did they enjoy it? The answer may be found in the faces of the safety patrol from Illinois at right. The boys, from 20 States and the District, will parade here today. Festivities last night were at the Sylvan Theater

New Salvation Army Leader, Wife Welcomed at Reception

Lieut. Commissioner Arnold Promises to Carry on With Unchanging Aims; Civic Leaders Participate in Ceremonies

Black-bonneted Salvation Army lassies and their blue-uniformed colleagues last night joined with civic leaders in giving a welcome to Lieut. Commissioner and Mrs. William Arnold, new leaders of the organization's Southern territory.

Seated in the flag-draped hall at 606 E street northwest, they heard their new leader, a square-shouldered, grey-haired man with a 41-year record of "Army" service, assure that he would "carry on" guided by its unchanging aims.

"The Salvation Army was created by the blessings of God to prove the truth of God's remedy for the complete regeneration of men and women and to really make them happy and useful as God intended them to be," he said.

Traces Growth

Tracing the growth of the Salvation Army movement in America, he recalled traveling with a handful of workers.

Earlier, Mrs. Arnold, who was presented with a basket of flowers by Edna Mae West, 13, and Nancy Swires, 9, members of the "Scout Guards and Sunbeams" of the local unit, spoke briefly expressing appreciation for the reception accorded her. A gifted poetess, one of her volumes was published in 1923.

Commissioner Arnold, appointed to his new position, which will embrace 15 Southern States and the District, comes from New York City, where he served as financial secretary of the Eastern Territory.

Among the other speakers were Thomas Lodge, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, substituting for Commissioner Melvin Hazen; Sidney F. Taliaferro, chairman of the Citizens' Advisory Board of the Salvation Army; Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Maj. Gilbert S. Decker, welfare and public relations secretary of the local "Army" unit.

Other guests were Isaac Gans, member of the "Army's" advisory board; William Sabin, of the Family Service Association; Ray Huff, superintendent of District Penal Institutions, and Mrs. Huff; Maj. Charles H. Dodd, Maj. Harold Gesner, Mrs. Major Dodd, Maj. Charles Walker, and Maj. Gilbert S. Decker. The Washington Divisional Band furnished music.

Naval Veteran Of 2 Wars Killed In Virginia Fire

A Naval veteran of two wars was killed yesterday when fire destroyed his Colonial Beach, Va., home. Only a few hours before he had written to his son in Washington, inviting him and his family for a Sunday visit.

Victim of the blaze was Lieut. Cmdr. William H. Caldwell, 75, who served with distinction in the battle of Santiago during the war with Spain and who served as chief construction engineer at the Naval Proving Grounds at Dahlgren, Va., during the World War. His son is William R. Caldwell, of 212 Twelfth street southwest, an employe of the District Water Department.

A graduate of the Naval Academy in 1886, Lieut. Comdr. Caldwell retired in 1921. Since then, he made his home at Colonial Beach, where he operated a hardware store and served as mayor several times. Besides the son, two grandchildren and a sister survive.

Military rites will be held Monday at 2 p. m. in Arlington Cemetery.

Hazen Praises Street's Work

Commissioner Hazen yesterday praised the work of Welfare Director Elwood Street, who leaves Monday to head the Community Chest in Richmond.

In a letter to the Rev. Lawrence J. Shehan, chairman of the Street dinner committee, which entertained Street Wednesday, the Commissioner, expressing regret that he cannot attend, said:

"Mr. Street has served the District well and faithfully. . . . I wish for Mr. Street the greatest of success in his new post. . . .

D.C. Student Sues To Annul Marriage

Edwin A. Schrader, college student of 1561 Thirty-fifth street northwest, yesterday asked District Court to annul his Frederick (Md.) marriage because his bride went through the ceremony "to spite another boy friend of hers with whom she had a quarrel."

Attorney Albert Lyman filed the complaint against Mrs. Winifred Sachs Schrader, of Hancock, Md. The petition said that Mrs. Schrader left him the day after the wedding and his consent was obtained by fraud.

Bolles Charges D.C. Code Fosters Milk Monopoly

With the accusation that the District milk code "fosters monopoly and strangles liberty," Representative Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin, yesterday declared hundreds of organizations and individuals throughout the Nation are interested in seeing it amended.

He termed the "situation here" typical of that in other sections of the country and "Nation-wide in its ramifications."

Madison, Wis., May 12 (AP).—State Senator Nelson (Progressive) introduced a resolution today asking Gov. Heil, Attorney General John Martin and the Attorney General of the United States to investigate an "alleged monopoly" of fluid milk by distributors in Wisconsin.

The resolution, referred to the Senate for later action, charged that executives of dairy companies throughout Wisconsin and the Nation were paid "enormous incomes" and that the character of some bills before the Legislature indicated an attempt to develop a monopoly for distributors.

O'Brian Decries Control Before Law Institute

Ex-Attorney General Of New York Assails 'Doctrine of Coercion'

John Lord O'Brian, of Buffalo, N. Y., former assistant to the Attorney General, told the American Law Institute at its annual dinner in the Mayflower Hotel last night that current legislation "relies too much on the doctrine of control and coercion."

"A great many people object to the tendency of legislators to minimize the teaching of experience, and the importance of the individual," he said. "Current legislation considers the individual only in connection with a group, a class, or a community. These tendencies are discouraging."

Introduced following a learned and humorous talk by former Senator George Wharton Pepper, of Philadelphia, president of the institute, O'Brian turned his attention to the Government's administrative agencies.

"No one questions the necessity for an increasing number of administrative bodies, and we recognize their powers must be enlarged," he said. "What alarms us is their being so rapidly expanded in power to determine motive, intent, purpose and willfulness.

"The average man is more interested in whether he will have a fair hearing before an impartial tribunal than in abstract conceptions of law. The great question in administrative law is 'Who is going to make the finding of fact?' And the layman is not satisfied with a tribune where the prosecutor sits as a judge on the motives of men in the most intimate fields of human relationship."

Edmund M. Morgan, professor of law at Harvard University, and one of the leading authorities in the United States on the laws of evidence, followed O'Brien. He engaged chiefly in satire, which was characterized by a statement that next year the Harvard Law School would change the name of its course in constitutional laws to contemporary judicial events."

Quarry Victim Dies

Staunton, Va., May 12 (AP).—Ellis T. Deihl, 38, died in a local hospital late yesterday, the victim of a rock fall in a quarry between Crimora and New Hope.

War Surgeons Told of Effects Of Anoxemia

Lack of Oxygen Produces Results Like Intoxication

The startling effects of anoxemia, a condition resulting from lack of oxygen and which may wrongfully mark the sufferer as intoxicated, were described to the tenth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy yesterday by two American officers.

Citing the many uses which oxygen has in the treatment of sick and wounded soldiers, Lieut. Col. Charles K. Berle and Lieut. W. R. Lovelace said that understanding of the gas is especially important in aviation.

"Symptoms of anoxemia are often compared to those of alcoholic intoxication because of their close similarity in many respects," the speakers said. "In both instances the individual always is convinced that he is rational, seldom lacks confidence and soon loses his capacity for self-criticism. Some individuals become euphoric, others morose and still others pugnacious and unwilling to listen to advice."

Col. Berle is attached to Walter Reed Hospital and Lieut. Lovelace, a reserve officer, is a member of the Mayo Clinic staff at Rochester, Minn. Their address was the final one in the congress' scientific discussions at the Willard Hotel.

Pointing out that a commercial air-line pilot died recently of coronary thrombosis an hour after landing from a flight at 12,000 feet elevation, the speakers urged all fliers of 40 and over to take oxygen when going into high altitudes.

Devoting the morning to scientific discussions, delegates to the international meeting recessed at noon and spent the remainder of the day at the Quantico (Va.) Marine Base, traveling by boat.

This morning the members will drive to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, where a special drill by the regiment of Midshipmen will be staged in their honor.

men did feats no man can do. A bevy of beautiful accordionists competed with acrobatic tap dancers for the attention of the audience.

Master of ceremonies Brooke Johns, American Automobile Association President Thomas P. Henry, Safety Patrol Supervisor Burton Marsh and others bustled to keep their charges happy, and succeeded.

The celebration was arranged by the American Automobile Association, which sponsors the patrols and their annual trips to Washington.

President Lauds Patrols

President Roosevelt recently wrote President Henry that "there is no phase of our national life today which is more cheering than the way in which our boys and girls are voluntarily assuming responsibilities that fit them for citizenship.

"This offers new hope for all that we are trying to keep abreast with changing times and changing conditions," he said.

"I am told that during the last 15 years the greatest decrease in traffic fatalities has been in the 5 to 14 age group. When it is considered that this age group represents the millions of school children who have the protection of the school patrols, it is apparent that the patrols have been a contributing factor to the fine safety record being established by young Americans."

The parade will march down Constitution avenue and will be reviewed by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools; Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department and Henry.

To Drill Before Parade

Before the procession forms, competitive drills will be held on the Mall and prizes will be presented to winners at the reviewing stand after the parade.

Contest Set For Statue Of Jefferson

Sculptor of Figure For Shrine to Be Picked in National Competition

The Thomas Jefferson statue which will be installed inside the memorial being erected here will be selected in an unlimited national competition to be announced in a few days, The Post learned yesterday.

Selecting the sculptor by this means is expected to dispel some of the ill feeling engendered by the controversial architectural design and the decision to locate the memorial near the Tidal Basin at the expense of many Japanese cherry trees.

Presumably the statue competition will be conducted by the Fine Arts Section of the Treasury Department, which is now administering a similar contest on architectural plans for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art Building.

Progress on the Thomas Jefferson Memorial project continued yesterday with award of a $2,157,000 contract to the John McShain Co., of Philadelphia, for erection of the superstructure. The foundation, which is being built by the Raymond Concrete Pile Co., of New York, is more than three-fourths complete.

The McShain contract provides for an exterior of Imperial Vermont Danby marble and an interior of Georgia white marble. Originally it was planned to use limestone for the interior, but the Fine Arts Commission objected.

Several weeks ago it was indicated in The Post that the sculptor of the Jefferson statue would be chosen through a national competition. Award of the architectural contract to the New York firm of John Russell Pope without a competition being held elicited bitter criticism in Congress last year.

Lesson No 10 By Dr. Ruhland

For his tenth and final lesson in health, Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday advised the "practice of moderation in all things."

Summing up the previous lessons, all included in "The Decalouge of Health," Dr. Ruhland says:

Spend part of your day out of doors; drink liberal quantities of water, five or six glasses a day; eat slowly and chew your food thoroughly; exercise daily and systematically; sleep eight hours out of twenty-four. Have bowels move daily; stand erect, walk erect, sit erect; brush teeth mornings and at night, and cultivate cheerfulness.

Hazen Criticizes Schulte Proposal

A suggestion the police assigned to the Alcoholic Beverage Board return to the regular police duties was criticized yesterday by Commissioner Hazen.

Made by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, the suggestion also called for all police assigned to the hack inspector's office to return to the department.

Commissioner Hazen said the eight men attached to the beverage board were doing police work, and that a former Congress deleted the salaries of A. B. C. inspectors and provided for members of the police department to do the liquor enforcement work.

K. H. Martin Left Half of Estate

Kenneth H. Martin, of 1613 Harvard street northwest, a Southern Railway inspector, is to receive one half of the residuary estate of his mother, Mrs. Minnie R. Griffen, it was revealed yesterday in New York, where the estate was appraised at $39,103 net for transfer tax purposes.

Martin's sister, Mrs. Viola Hunt, of Rosemont, Pa., will receive the other share. Mrs. Griffen died January 12, 1939.

Pimlico Asks Ban on Johnstown Show Bets

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Pimlico, Md., May 12.—Straggling into the office of Pimlico's racing secretary at odd hours this morning, a motley file of horse trainers and stable agents dropped seven names into the battered old entry box.

POVICH

They are names out of the oldest social register in the world—The Stud Book. Their bearers are the horses nominated to run in tomorrow's forty-ninth Pimlico Preakness. Their presence in the Preakness is no sudden whim on the part of their owners. The course that tomorrow will steer them toward the starting stalls was first plotted 400 years ago.

Bluebloods of the turf, they are, but to call the pedigree of their records the oldest social register in the world is perhaps a bit unfair—to the thoroughbred horse. As Mr. Vaughn Flannery, Darlington breeder, and a director of the Pimlico Jockey Club, points out in "The Maryland Horse," theirs is more than a record of ancestry.

Mortals reach the social register through the accident of high birth. On birth, they are accepted. The Stud Book is more discriminating, for only the worthy are deemed deserving enough to be reserved for improvement of the breed.

In his time, and since, King Henry VIII has been reviled as a gastronomical glutton, a regal slob and a destroyer of the marriage vows, but it was King Hank who, more than any other guy, is responsible for the fact that today there is a thoroughbred horse and thoroughbred racing.

It was his impatience with the fat, trucky-looking steeds in the Royal Stables of England 400 years ago, that made possible today's Preakness field of thoroughbred horseflesh. King Henry VIII, inhibited no doubt, by his own paunchiness, demanded a sleeker, faster saddle horse than the heavy-rumped animals he found in the royal barns.

Old King Hank Started It All

So, 400 years ago, King Henry VIII launched upon an improvement of the breed. He sought out England's finest, experimented with blood lines, and gave the world "the blooded horse." The thoroughbred appellation was to come later. As "blooded horses," the descendants of the royal studs were known for more than a century until the Arab was imported.

King Henry's "blooded horses" were a vast improvement over the unimproved English stock, Mr. Flannery tells us, but horsemen of the seventeenth century were still unsatisfied. England's blooded horses were not yet as lithe or as fast as the Arabian horse. So, between the years of 1690-1700, eminent Britons who had visited Arabia brought to England the three thoroughbreds from which all thoroughbred stock of the last 300 years has sprung.

The Encyclopedia Britannica identifies those three Arabian steeds as Godolphin, Darley's Arabian and Byerly's Turk. The original ownership of Godolphin is nebulous, but it was a Mr. Darley who imported Arabian, and it follows that a Mr. Byerly imported the Turk. Breeding the Arabian trio to native English mares produced the thoroughbred horse of the past 300 years.

And at the command of the owners who tomorrow will be represented in the Preakness was a complete record of the ancestry of every thoroughbred that spawned from the Arabians. "From these records," writes Mr. Flannery," the breeder hoped to select for his mare just the stallion to help produce a foal possessed of the quality of bone and muscle, and above all, the disposition, the speed and the courageous racing heart to win the Preakness . . .

"With the air of a man who has made up his mind, the breeder closed his books and walked through the night to give his favorite mare a goodnight pat as though to tell her the die has been cast. The decision the breeder made that night is recorded in the racing program in your hand today—Preakness Day—for under the name of the horse of your choice, is set down the name of the father and mother."

Baltimore Is a One-Horse Town Today

As far as the public is concerned tonight, Baltimore—Pimlico—is a one-horse town. The one horse is Johnstown, fresh from his Kentucky Derby victory and slated to go to the post as the shortest-priced favorite ever to grace the Preakness. But to the men who breed and train horses, Johnstown is no sure thing.

"Many, many things can happen to beat a horse in a horse race," Mr. Flannery was saying today. Twenty Grand, a horse that ran the Derby in faster time than Johnstown, was beaten in the 1931 Preakness by Mate, a horse than ran third to him in the Derby. Tomorrow there may be a parallel—Challedon, a good horse, ran second to Johnstown in the Derby, you may remember.

"We don't know actually how good Johnstown is, because he has never been pushed as a 3-year-old. But we don't know, either, how good is the filly Ciencia. And Johnstown may get a stiffer battle of it in the early running of the Preakness than he did in the Derby. Volitant may run with him for quite a while. Danny Meade can get a horse away from the gate faster than any other boy in the race and he'll be up on Volitant.

"But before a horse race, nothing is conclusive. I've seen jockeys on favorites equally as hot as Johnstown break a saddle stirrup and lose the race. Once in England, a hot favorite was beaten because it was struck by lightning in the stretch run. Granville, a horse that might have won the 1936 Derby, ran only three strides before losing his jockey and being out of the race. That is horse racing."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Baltimore, May 12.—Though it started two years before the Kentucky Derby, and has been generally won by better horses than won the many derbies, the Preakness has never captured the imagination of the country's horsepark fans. And with a view of changing that young Alf Vanderbilt seems to have hit upon the one remedy. He is making the race financially impossible to ignore.

CONSIDINE

Since young Alf took over here at Pimlico the value of the Preakness has jumped from the $40,000 to the $75,000 class and probably will become a $100,000 fixture before long. The race's air of impermanence, born of four changes in the distance and a cessation of galloping from 1890 to 1909, has been wiped away. Vanderbilt has adopted it—bought it as a matter of fact—and he is still so young that he will be around to handle it personally until 1975 or so, barring a quarter crack or a cloven hoof.

The kid has a lot of old Southern beau in him and it has prompted the hostesses of this village to shine up the plate that grandma stored in the cyclone cellar. More than ever Preakness time is a time of grand old parties in and around Baltimore. Unlike Louisville it has never been much of a Chamber of Commerce gallop, with open season on Kentucky colonels, carousing in the streets and hooligans sprinting up and down the hotel corridors, primed with julep juice. Baltimore takes the Preakness pretty much in stride.

All Are Considerate at Preakness Time

Even the banditti behind the hotel registration counters have a kind of smile for you and are always a little conscience-stricken about working in a city where hotel accommodations reach an all-American low. Even the cab drivers think twice before they stuff a sponge up the nose of the meter.

But the mind of John Doe doesn't retain the name of Preakness winners. Most of you who are reading this, I hope, couldn't suddenly yell out last year's winner. It was Dauber, of course, but he was probably much harder to remember than the name of the oat-inhaler who won the 1938 Derby, Lawrin, or the last couple of winners of $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap—Stagehand and Kayak II.

One remembers Derby winners because the race is the culmination of a kind of half-witted and haphazard Mardi Gras, because it revolves around a good old gaffer who looks the part, Col. Matt Winn, and because it has been steamed up by the City of Louisville, the hotels and the whisky firms. Baltimore and the Preakness perhaps don't want that kind of thing, or say they don't, but they certainly want the resultant attention given the race itself. And Vanderbilt's pumping of fresh money into the purse of the winner is a traditional shortcut to racing tradition.

Money is the soul of racing. A horse's greatness, almost without exception, is based on his earning power. His stud fee, later in life, depends a lot on his winnings while he raced.

Santa Anita Fixture Lacks in Tradition

The Santa Anita Handicap has no more tradition or background than Topsy. But in five years it has passed, in public interest and the interest of most horsemen, every race in the country except the Derby. And the reason for that is simply its $100,000 price tag. Without that it wouldn't get out of the agate type of the charts.

It may be surprising to some, who have an idea how much Vanderbilt is worth, to see him hesitating about instantly making the Preakness a $100,000 race, or a $150,000 race—it probably wouldn't make much difference to him. But the fellow's a cutey. The money he has plunked into Pimlico has gone where it did the most good. He has improved his property, and kept the respect and support of the grumpy old-line Tories who might ordinarily have put the freeze on him as an upstart outlander. He even made his stable pay its own way, which is some kind of a record. With $15,000 (and the help of his wife, who is related to Seabiscuit's owner) Alf got the 'Biscuit-Admiral match race last fall—the same race that was going to cost Belmont $100,000.

Alf proceeds cautiously, never taking a step that a conservative businessman wouldn't take. But he has an unshatterable yen to make his Preakness the country's No. 1 3-year-old breeze, and he is proceeding slowly but certainly along the accepted line of buying the Preakness' way into high equine society—inasmuch as it can't seem to make the grade on its own wobbly heritage.

Cards Defeat Reds, Bolster League Lead

Mize Hits 2, Martin One as St. Louis Wins, 8-7; Loss Derringer's First

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, May 12.—The St. Louis Cards strengthened their National League lead with home runs today, defeating Cincinnati, 8 to 7, in an attack led by Johnny Mize and Pepper Martin who between them accounted for seven tallies.

Martin homered in the third with Mort Cooper aboard and in the fifth, Mize hit the first of his two circuit clouts to climax a five-hit five-run outburst that otherwise included three singles and Stu Martin's triple.

The uprising, staged before a Ladies' Day crowd of more than 15,000, sent big Paul Derringer to the showers for his first defeat, against three victories, this year.

The game, while boosting the Cards' lead, otherwise complicated upper-bracket standings, sending the Reds into a three-way tie with Brooklyn and Boston next below the Cards, with the idle Chicago Cubs dropping to fifth.

Kramer Hurls, Bats Browns To Victory

St. Louis, May 12.—In one of the best pitched games of the still young season, Rookie Jack Kramer held the Detroit Tigers to two singles today and topped his performance by driving in the only run to give the St. Louis Browns a 1-to-0 victory.

Kramer, a righthander, retired the first three men, walked Hank Greenberg to start the second inning, and then retired 15 straight batters before Chet Laabs singled to start the seventh inning. Fred Walker got the other single pinch hitting in the ninth inning for Alton Benton, Detroit's pitcher.

Clint Brown's Relief Job Defeats Cleveland for White Sox, 4-3

Star 'Fireman' Fans Chapman With Bases Full; Ben Protests, Banished; Chicago's 13th Win

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 12.—The bases were filled with Cleveland Indians when Clint Brown, star emergency pitcher, came to the rescue of the Chicago White Sox today. Two putouts quickly ended the game, the Sox winning the series opener, 4 to 3.

Brown required only four pitches, three curved strikes sandwiched around one ball, to fan Ben Chapman. The Cleveland left fielder, who watched the third strike break by, was so infuriated that his protest demonstration led to his banishment from the field by Umpire Steve Basil. Brown then took Ken Keltner's bouncer and tossed him out himself.

It was the eighth appearance in his team's 20 games for Brown, who two years ago set a record by appearing as a reliever 53 times but who was out most of last season because of an elbow operation.

The triumph was the Chicagoans' thirteenth in their last 17 games and entrenched them more firmly in third place.

Rigney Winner

Johnny Rigney, Chicago sophomore right-hander, who received credit for the victory, was touched for three runs in the first two innings, but he worked steadily until the ninth when Ollie Bejma's fumble of a grounder, Hal Trosky's single and an intentional pass filled the bases.

In the first inning, Roy Weatherly, of Clevaland, scored on a walk, a stolen base, an error and Bruce Campbell's double. The Indians scored two runs in the second on a single by Keltner, the first of Oscar Grimes' two doubles and a scratch hit by Weatherly.

Marvin Owen and Luke Appling, the left side of the White Sox infield, led Chicago's 12-hit attack off Johnny Allen and Joe Dobson with a trio of singles apiece. Each contributed two blows to the pairs of Sox runs off Allen in the first and fifth frames.

Allen's own throwing error and a sacrifice fly were all that was needed with the two hits for the first inning scoring, while Rip Radcliffe started the fifth inning scoring with a single and after the other two infielders hit, Allen forced across a run with two passes.

Phils, Outhit, Beat Giants On Homer, 10-8

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 12.—The Philadelphia Phillies made 11 hits, including one home run, do more work than 13 hits, including three home runs to beat the New York Giants, 10 to 6, today, and swap their cellar position for sixth place in the National League.

The Phillies' circuit blast was Morris Arnovich's third of the year with two on base in the eighth inning. It settled a loosely disputed issue which was also punctuated by the homers of Zeke Bonura with one on in the second inning, Hank Danning's with none on in the third and Mel Ott's fourth of the season with one on in the ninth.

The Phils opened the scoring with a double steal in the first frame but the Giants went ahead on their first two homers and the combination of Joe Moore's single and Joe Demaree's double in the fourth.

Race Solons To Decide Plea Today

Fitzsimmons Entry Will Go to Post At Least a 1 to 5 Proposition to Win

By Bob Considine.

Baltimore, May 12.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and a committee of bondholders of the Pimlico Race Track today asked the Maryland Racing Commission to permit it to refuse to sell show tickets on Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons' brilliant Preakness entry of Johnstown, Gilded Knight and Challenge. The commission's decision will be made tomorrow. If the field is reduced to less than five, no show tickets will be sold.

The entry will go to the post tomorrow afternoon at least a 1-to-5 betting proposition to win, and perhaps may even be a shorter price. The record short price in the history of the classic, which began in 1873, is the $2.70 win money on War Admiral two years ago. The Admiral closed at 1 to 3½.

Must Pay 5 Cents on Dollar

There is a State law which rules that the Maryland pari-mutuel machines must pay off at least a nickel on a dollar. However, there will be such a small field in the forty-ninth renewal of America's richest 3-year-old horse race that the track would be certain to lose thousands of dollars on show tickets, so much money would be bet on Johnstown and his coupled running mates to show. In all probability Johnstown, etc., will be backed down to perhaps 1-to-100 to show whereas State law rules that the track cannot pay less than 1-to-20 odds, or 5 cents on each winning dollar bet.

Not even Man o' War, who held the low payoff Preakness record until War Admiral came along to beat out Pompoon by a whisker in 1937, ever had the supporters that Johnstown has in Baltimore tonight.

"Sure Thing"

Nobody can see how the big fellow, who won the Kentucky Derby by nine lengths last week, can possibly lose, though War Admiral came perilously close to burning up hundreds of thousands of dollars bet on him as a sure thing. However, Johnstown's case is a little different. The only colt that seems to have any chance against Big John is Gilded Knight. And if Gilded Knight, winner of the Chesapeake, wins the Preakness, Johnstown's backers will be paid off anyway.

Chuckling old Jim Fitzsimmons was in a quandary this afternoon trying to give proper credit to both his dynamic charges. He couldn't go back on Johnstown, who so dramatically gave the hunched little trainer his third Derby winner last Saturday. But at the same time he wouldn't sell Gilded Knight short. "Gilded Knight's got a chance, a real good chance," the old boy said. Because of the overpowering presence

Harris Picks Alexandra to Hurl Against Red Sox Today

Lefty Grove To Pitch For Boston

Nats' Pilot Making Desperate Effort To Fill Gaps in Weak Mound Staff

By Shirley Povich.

In a desperate move to fill the gaps in his pitching staff, Bucky Harris today will unveil the Venezuelan, Alex Alexandra, as a starting pitcher against no less than Lefty Grove and the Boston Red Sox.

The dark-visaged member of the Nats' Latin Legion is being honored with a tentative starting role following impressive performances in three of the four relief jobs he has been entrusted with this season.

Harris is no little intrigued by the possibilities of Alexandra's sidearm curve and fast ball, and is turning to the Venezuelan in an hour when Dutch Leonard is ill and Jimmy DeShong in a pitching slump.

May Cause Trouble

Alexandra is scarcely expected to be overawed by the Red Sox, who are pressing the Yankees for the league lead after a triumphant Western trip. The Venezuelan's big league baptismal took the form of being called into a Griffith Stadium game with the bases full of Yankees and Joe DiMaggio at bat, a situation from which he escaped cleverly. And his next appearance in a big league game also found him entering the fray when the bases were full of Yankees, Yankee Stadium half full of customers, and the dangerous Joe Gordon at bat. He got out of that one, too.

Lefty Grove, showing no evidence of the ailing arm that was supposed to be his this season, is Manager Joe Cronin's pitching nomination for the three-game series here. It will be the Red Sox's first appearance of the season in Griffith Stadium.

Washington fans will be viewing the club that is supposed to fight the Yankees down to the wire in this year's pennant race and perhaps win it. They will be glimpsing also, for the first time, young Ted Williams, hailed as the prize rookie of 1939.

Justifies Notices

The tall, gangling Williams, an outfielder with a classic batting stroke, is hitting .330 for the Red Sox and justifying the lavish notices he received in the spring training. When the Nats were in Detroit two days ago, Detroit folks were still talking of the amazing home run swatted by Williams over the third deck of rightfield in Briggs Stadium.

The Red Sox will be presenting another prize rookie in Jim Tabor, third baseman, who is making Boston folks forget about Frank Higgins. The hitting of Williams and Tabor has proved a hefty help to the Red Sox, who also boast the American League batting champion in a fellow known as Jimmy Foxx.

The Nats, slowly recovering from the grippe epidemic which struck down Cecil Travis, Charley Gelbert, Harry Kelley, Dutch Leonard and Sammy West on the Western trip, are approaching full strength. As a precautionary measure, Clark Griffith sent all of his ailing athletes to a throat clinic yesterday.

U.S. Olympic Team To Sail on Foreign Boat to Finland

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 12.—Because it was impossible to arrange for transportation on an American vessels, the United States Olympic team will go to the 1940 games at Helsingfors, Finland, aboard the Motor Ship Pilsudski, of the Gdynia-America Line.

The squad of about 350 athletes, coaches and officials will sail from New York July 3 and arrive at Helsingfors July 13, giving the athletes a full week to become acclimated before the twelfth Olympic games open July 20.

The Pilsudski also will be used for the return trip.

W. & L. Pitcher Revives Squeeze Play to Score Mate

Spotty Play By G. U. Aids W. & L. Victory

Hoyas' Base Running, Fielding Weak as Generals Win, 5-4

By Jack Munhall.

Georgetown's Hilarious Hoyas continued to play streaky baseball yesterday and by combining weak clutch hitting with weird fielding and doubtful base running, succeeded in losing to Washington and Lee, 5 to 4, on the Hilltop field, for their fifth defeat in 12 games this season.

Presenting the Generals with a "gift" run, which was the forerunner of two others in the second inning, Joe Judge's nine spent the remainder of the close but uninteresting game futilely trying to catch up. They got as close as 3 to 2 in the fifth, and 5 to 4, with men on first and third, in the eighth, but effective relief pitching by the Generals' ace, Bob Gregerson, stifled their dying threats.

Gregerson, a tall fresh-faced right-hander with speed to burn, answered an urgent call for help in the eighth when it seemed that at last Georgetown was clicking. The Hoyas had already scored a run on a walk to Joe McFadden, a single by Johnny McGowan and Stan Blaszek's sacrifice fly. McGowan was perched on third, and Jim Castiglia, pinch-hitting for William Wixsted, G. U.'s starting and losing pitcher, had just assured the removal of O'Connor by slapping a single off his pitching hand.

Hard Task

Then it was with men on first and third, the tying and winning runs, that Gregerson, who was to have been saved for W. and L.'s crucial Southern Conference game with Maryland this afternoon, hitched his pants and strode to the mound. His assignment was no enviable one, for at the bat was the long-hitting Joe Mahoney, and waiting his turn was Koshlap, a good hitter in his own right.

Gregerson didn't start auspiciously, for the first thing he did was to toss a single to Mahoney, which scored McGowan and should have been sufficient to bring in Castiglia. But the waddling substitute catcher was held on third and that's where he stayed with the potential scoretying run. For Gregerson bore down on Koshlap and personally put him out, tossing his easy grounder to first.

Now warmed up, Gregerson made short work of the Hoyas in the ninth, protecting the Generals' slim lead. He whiffed the wild-swinging Lou Ghecas, and then dealt a similar dose to Jim Durkin, the G. U. clean-up hitter, before he pinked Ghecas with a pitch and placed the tying run on base once again. A great play by second baseman and Capt. Johnny Dill saved Gregerson then. Dill went quickly to his right, scooped up McFadden's well-tagged drive and ended the game with a strike peg to first.

He Argues, Man Scores

Ghecas' habit of arguing with the umpire cost Georgetown a run in the second. After one was out, Bob Gary singled. Dill, the next General batter, dropped a single into center on the hit and run, and the amazingly fleet Gary went all the way home, taking three bases on the play.

Al Davis followed with the third straight single, a looper to right, Dill pulled up at third, and Davis barely reached second on the throw to third. Ghecas, believing that Davis should have been caleld out, held the ball in his hand while he argued with the umpire. While he was having his say Dill grew impatient and headed for home, arriving there almost simultaneously with Ghecas' desperate throw which Catcher Blaszek dropped, removing any doubt that the runner was safe.

The Generals' game deciding rally in the eighth was "double" trouble for Wixted. With one out, Bob Keim singled and consecutive doubles by Doug Simpson and Gary produced two runs.

Billy Conn Gets Decision Over Krieger

10,087 See 'Rubber' Bout; Pittsburgher Is Easy Winner

A crowd of 10,087, paying $25,700 at the gate, saw the clean-cut young Pittsburgher, dancing as nimbly as a marionette on a string, not only outclass the stockier Krieger at long range but actually take the play away from him at close quarters, using a right in the clinches that kept Krieger's lowered head bobbing like a cork.

It was the third meeting between the pair, with each holding a verdict. Consequently they started warily, and it wasn't until the third round that there was any real action. In that frame Conn shot a left hook which momentarily halted the forever stalking Krieger.

Monotonous Rounds

From that point on the rounds became an almost monotonous series of repetitions. Krieger would dash from his corner, leap into the air and throw a right or left in a vain attempt to tag Conn's chin, but the elusive Pittsburgher would dance away, peppering Krieger's face with straight lefts or left hooks, with a sharp right cross trailing along behind.

Occasionally Krieger would get the better of a close quarter exchange, but usually he came up with brown eyes blinking from the short rights Conn brought up into his face.

Conn's Best Round

The eighth was Conn's best round. It was in that round he began to cross his right effectively, the monotonous left still pumping a sodden dirge into Krieger's face. However, the rugged Brooklyn lad never ceased boring in, and never was in really serious trouble.

Krieger lost the ninth with a low blow which brought a wince to Conn's face, but he was no more than even for that round at best. The Associated Press score card gave Krieger only one round, the second, and that by a narrow margin.

George Deyoe Winner in Skeet Shoot

By the Associated Press.

Staunton, Va., May 12.—Two-man and individual championship rounds were fired today in the opening events of the fifth annual Southeastern skeet competition.

Dr. F. E. Markley, Staunton, won in the .20-gauge shoot, and teamed with Wayne Erskine, Staunton, to take the two-man championship.

George Deyoe, Washington, was high man in the .410-gauge firing and paired with H. G. Walters, Washington, to win the championship in this event.

Markley was forced into an extra round to earn the individual title. At the end of the regular firing period he was tied with J. P. Coiner, of Waynesboro, each having broken 98 targets. In the shoot off, Markley smashed 49 targets to his opponent's 48.

For the .20-gauge team championship, Markley's 98 and Erskine's 95 totaled 193 to top the field. Deyoe and Walters were runnerup, the former shooting 93 and the latter 96, for a total of 189.

Interhigh Golf Title Again Won By Roosevelt

Western Beaten, 5 and 4; Third Straight Cup For Riders' Team

Roosevelt High School golfers won the inter-high championship and Dawes Cup for the third consecutive year by defeating Western, 5 to 4, yesterday at Indian Spring. The Rough Riders will meet the winner of the metropolitan section for the sectional schoolboy championship.

Meanwhile, Bethesda and Rockville maintained a steady pace after the "Met" title. Bethesda trouncing an old rival, Blair High, by an 8½-to-½ margin at Congressional, while Rockville routed Bladensburg, 7-2, at Woodmont.

Carl Willett's 75 topped the Bethesda scores, while David "Scotty" Ross was in his usual role as low man for Rockville with 74 over the Woodmont course.

After Cliff Gruver defeated George Vass and Bill Waggaman scored an 80, lowest of the day, for Roosevelt in beating Keene, of Western, the two paired for the best ball and three points. Western outscored the champions, 4-2, in the next two matches, but Jimmy Patterson, undefeated for the season, won over Kemon on the final green for the Riders' deciding point. The victory averted a three-way tie between Roosevelt, Western and Tech.

Manor's Women Golfers Beat Columbia, 12-0, at Woodmont

Race for Women's District Golf Association Title Closer as Indian Spring's Lead Is Cut

Manor Country Club's women golfers threw a definite challenge to Indian Spring's expected easy march to retention of their Women's District Golf Association first team title by swamping Columbia, 12-0, yesterday at Woodmont. Indian Spring was pressed in scoring a 7-5 victory over Columbia on opening day, and thus Manor picked up five points.

Meanwhile, Indian Spring drew further ahead of the balance of the field with a surprisingly one-sided 10-2 win over Congressional. Chevy Chase dealt Argyle's game but weak combination its fourth consecutive shutout defeat, 12-0, while Army and Navy made one-sided matches the order of the day by trouncing Washington, 10½ to 1½.

Thus, with half the ten-match schedule completed, Indian Spring is on top with 48 points to Manor's 45, but the latter has played one less match. Chevy Chase remained in the running with 40½ points, also with one less match than the leaders, while Army and Navy's triumph brought its total to 33.

Columbia Blanked

Columbia presented its strongest line-up against Marion Brown's Manor aggregation but it was blanked in all four foursomes.

Congressional's weakened octet was no match for Indian Spring, scoring only in the last foursome where Mrs. George Goetzmann and Mrs. H. Moffitt won two out of three points over Mrs. H. W. Sharpe and Mrs. J. H. Bullock. The first match that found Mrs. Betty Meckley and Mrs. Walter Stokes against Mrs. Myron Davy and Mrs. W. R. Bush was a sweep for the champions, although the margin was close and Mrs. Davy carried the brunt of the attack for the losers.

The day marked the most one-sided matches of the series to date. Chevy Chase had its own way in blanking Argyle, while Washington could muster points only in their last match, where Mrs. S. Whipple and Mrs. J. E. McKay gained a half with Mrs. A. Torlinski and Mrs. A. Whittaker.

Manor Wins

In a postponed second team match at Army and Navy, Manor celebrated its best day of the season by gaining another sweep, blanking Washington, 9 to 0, while Chevy Chase defeated Indian Spring, 5 to 4, despite forfeiting the last three points. Association President Mrs. Robert A. Lacey and her partner, Mrs. F. L. Parks, won Columbia's lone points as Congressional won, 6½ to 2½.

The Maryland State tournament next week at Congressional will force a lapse in the team play until May 23 at Indian Spring, when the Manor-Chevy Chase battle will decide the team Indian Spring has to beat for the title.

Mrs. Vaile Wins Kenwood Tourney

Mrs. Charles Vaile won low gross prize in the "Birthday Party" tournament of the Kenwood Women's Golf Association yesterday with a 91. Mrs. Robyn Thornburg had least putts, 33, while the selective holes prize went to Mrs. Frances Thomas.

Mrs. Roy C. Miller was in charge of the event that was followed by a group lesson from George Diffenbaugh, club professional.

CONGRESSIONAL

Mrs. Houston Harper and Mrs. H. L. Cobb tied in the most five's tournament yesterday at Congressional, each scoring five.

Redskins Sign Eighth New College Star

If the Redskins don't wil the National Professional football title next fall, it con't be blamed on the lack of material—potential, to say the least.

George Marshall announced the signing of the eighth college player yesterday to plug the gaps in the Redskin team.

Coach Frank Dobson, of Maryland, put the Redskins on his trail. His son, Jack, who plays with Army, insists he is the best lineman that the Cadets played against last fall.

When Army played Franklin and Marshall, Uhrinyak led every offensive play, he pointed out.

The new Redskin played in every game except one in his last three years at college, and last season only missed 12 minutes of play during the entire season.

The other new players already signed by the Redskins are:

Jimmy German, quarterback, of Centre College.

Ellwood Borck, fullback, Washington State Normal.

A Few Words of Common Sense . . .

The Story of Dry Lumber

Under a microscope a cross-section of any piece of lumber looks like a honeycomb or a sponge. It is composed of thousands and thousands of tiny cells, so small as to be practically invisible to the unaided human eye. Both in and surrounding each of these tiny cells in its growing state is a great deal of water—often as much as three times the weight of the wood substance itself.

The real significance of this to the homeowner is not apparent until the tree has been cut down and sawn into lumber. No longer protected from the atmosphere by the heavy bark of the growing tree, this water begins to evaporate. First the water surrounding the cells and then that within the cells themselves is absorbed by the surrounding air.

Naturally, as all this water is drawn out the cells of the lumber collapse and are compressed very close together. This is the cause of shrinkage in lumber—a common occurence which all of us have observed. Often the shrinkage is as great as 10 or 15% of the volume of the lumber itself.

Now let's suppose this green lumber is built permanently into a house, your house. The air in the average home contains 6% moisture. The lumber contains 150% moisture. The result is a rapid drying out of the lumber in your home. At it drys it shrinks. As it shrinks, it may pull the walls, the roof, the floors and partitions with it. Thus the balance and alignment of the whole house may be destroyed or impaired by the shrinkage and warping of damp, green lumber. Certainly the use of such lumber in a home is a false economy in every sense of the word.

Just one more point to remember in buying the lumber for your home. Even dry lumber can reabsorb moisture. Not only must the lumber be thoroughly dried, but is must be kept that way until it goes into your home. That is why at the modern lumber yards of I. S. Turover you will find lumber scientically, thoroughly dried and kept under cover in immense, dry-lumber sheds, until the instant of delivery.

By Bill Burnett

Making his first interhigh baseball appearance of the season, after earning All-High recognition in 1937, Johnny Thrift slammed a home run and triple yesterday to pace Roosevelt nine to a 10-to-3 swamping of Western and install the Riders in undisputed possession of first place in the West division of the series. The only other interhigh game of the day went to Woodrow Wilson when it pounded two Central hurlers for 11 safeties and an 8-to-2 victory.

From the opening inning, when Thrift's triple against the centerfield fence at Roosevelt stadium sent the Robertson twins, Jimmy and Billy, racing across the plate, Western was the team trying to catch up. Less than two weeks ago the two teams came together with Western a 7-4 victor, and the Riders took their revenge in lumps yesterday. Twice they scored in the first, added three more on Thrift's homer in the third, and in the sixth sent Carmel Nance, Western's pride, to the showers with another brace of runs.

Nance Hit Hard

Before his retirement, however, Nance had been touched for nine hits and 7 runs. Johnny Burke, who beat the Riders two weeks ago, took over and, after getting slugged for three more safeties, was taken out in favor of Joe Nimnom in the eighth.

Western had its moments, too, though they were brief and scattered. One was the homer hit by Bobby Leach in the seventh with Charley Mehaffey on base. On his first cut, Leach fouled the ball over the fence near the rightfield line. He straightened the next one out for the round trip.

It was a wild, error-filled farce with more poor plays than good, and Roosevelt owed its victory to hitting and big Eddie Vermillion's pitching alone. Between them the Robertson twins made five errors, the strangest being Jimmy's wild throws to first on two successive plays. The chunky Jimmy also made a baserunning error that robbed him of a triple when he failed to touch first base on a clout in the eighth.

Wells in 7-Hitter

Wilson's unexpected victory over Central's slugging corps was credited to the seven-hit pitching of slender Joe Wells. The southpaw youngster went the distance, fanning five and allowing but three walks.

The Mount Pleasanters scored first in the initial inning, on successive doubles by Pat Fenlon and Len Sokol, but were tied in the fourth and dropped behind one inning later. With the score 3-1 against him in the sixth, Central's tiny righthander Dick Rozzelle, lost his conttrol completely and allowed four hits and three runs. The brace of scores off Charley Kligman, who relieve Rozelle in the seventh, made no difference whatever. Frank Bond, Wilson shortstop, drove himself and Al Pyles across with his home run in the seventh. Ray Banello and Jello Lagos also had four-baggers, the latter's circuit hit coming in the ninth with nobody on.

With its second victory in two weeks over Central, Wilson once again had a fair chance for the West section title. It was tied for second with Western, while Central faded to the bottom of the section due to its loss.

Rough Rider Caught at Plate on Involved Rundown

Western High was able to nip this run at home plate yesterday, but Roosevelt took a 10-3 victory in the interhigh series anyway. Jimmy Robertson, after singling and going to third on Relief Pitcher Johnny Burke's wild pitch in the sixth, attempted to come home on his brother Bill's grounder. Almost the entire Western squad was involved in the play, but Second Baseman Frank Dwyer finally threw to Burke for the putout

Lincoln Parkers Avenge Earlier Loss; Cole Is Star

With three pitchers holding Washington-Lee High batsmen to four scattered hits, Eastern High took revenge for an earlier setback yesterday when it issued the Arlington lads their second straight defeat, 10 to 1, on the Lincoln Park field. "Puddin" Lovett hurled one-hit ball for four innings and gave way to Warren Earhardt. He allowed only one safety in the next three. Johnny Deavers finished up with two hits in two innings.

The Little Generals' most dependable pitcher, Shanty Havener, was credited with the loss. His seven-inning stint resulted in all nine of the White Tide's hits.

Rightfielder Cole started Eastern toward victory in the first inning with a double that scored Cooksey and Nutwell. The Tide added single counters in the third and fourth, and topped matters off with a four-run spree in the sixth. A walk, single and fielders' choice loaded the bags and Cooksey unloaded them with a double. Nutwell sent Cooksey home with another double.

Washington-Lee's only tally was in the fourth, resulting from a walk issued Payne, a wild pitch and an error on Nutwell.

Big Car Races Begin Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., May 12.—All roads lead to Frederick tomorrow, where the opening of the big car racing season will be launched officially at 2 p. m.

Included in the field of 22 drivers are the leading pilots in the East, and a new track mark is expected. Mark Light, current leader in the Eastern ranks, is a slight favorite to cop first money.

Light will be driving his modernized Miller, the car that established a new track record at Reading, Pa., two weeks ago. The races, however, will be no joyride for Light. The Pennsylvania youngster will face stiff opposition from Charley Carey and Rex Williams.

Pimlico Asks Ban On Show Bets

of Johnstown it will be the smallest field since 1918.

Johnstown is owned by William Woodward. The Wheatley Stables, operated by Mrs. Ogden Phipps, feeds Gilded Knight. Woodward also owns Challenger, but Fitz may not start him. Jim Stout will again be up on Johnstown. Little Ruperto Donoso will pilot Gilded Knight.

Here's the line on the other horses ready to face the mile and three-sixteenths test:

Challedon, the big Maryland colt who took second money at the Kentucky Derby, is 10 to 1. Track Owner Vanderbilt's Impound is 15 to 1, as is Volitant. The famed filly Ciencia, who lost a lot of her supporters by pulling up very tired after a workout, is 20 to 1. Carol Bierman will be on her in the big race. She will carry 121 pounds to the others 126. Don Meade, whose license was recently restored in Maryland, will ride Volitant.

Terps Play W. & L. With Title at Stake

Over 300 Entered in A. A. U. Meet, Other Half of Double Header Attraction

The University of Maryland's hopes of adding the Southern Conference baseball title to its boxing crown and thereby climaxing one of its most successful outdoor sports seasons will be decided at College Park this afternoon.

Burt Shipley's ever-improving nine, boasting an eight-game winning streak and a record of 12 triumphs in 16 contests this spring, tackles Washington and Lee and V. M. I. in a twin bill, starting at 1 o'clock.

The Terps, who have won five and lost one in the conference and are fighting with Richmond and Duke for the league lead, will toss their twin aces, Lefty Earl Springer and righthanded Pershing Mondorff, against the Southern invaders. It was still unsettled last night which team would play Maryland in the first game. Chances are, however, it will be V. M. I. because the Generals were in action against Georgetown yesterday.

A. A. U. Title Meet

Baseball is half of a very promising double-barreled attraction at College Park. While the nines are playing behind the gym the annual A. A. U. track championships will be contested in Byrd Stadium, starting at 2 o'clock. More than 300 entries are in the field seeking scholastic and open honors.

The host University of Maryland squad, undefeated and tied once in six outdoor meets, is a pronounced favorite to annex the open title over strong rivals, including Georgetown Catholic, American and Gallaudet and several independent club teams. Washington and Lee, recent winner of the interscholastic section of the Field Day meet at Maryland, looks most formidable of the high schools.

Several interesting individual duels and the long-awaited local appearances of a pair of sensational Georgetown freshmen weight throwers are expected to highlight the meet.

Olympic Prospect

Al Blozsis, 6-foot 6-inch Hoya yearling, who is conceded an excellent chance to make the 1940 Olympic squad as a shot and perhaps a discus heaver, and his classmate, Greg Koehler, a javelin thrower of almost immeasurable potentialities, will display their prowess for the first time in competition here.

Blozsis, who came within 2 feet of equaling the world's 16-pound shotput record in the Maryland-Fifth Regiment games at Baltimore last March, will compete only as an exhibitionist. Since he will represent the Metropolitan A. C. of New York in the A. A. W. championships there this summer, and since A. A. U. rules restrict members from participating in more than one meet, Blozsis is entered only for the practice.

Koehler, who has been sailing the javelin farther than 200 feet, is a bona fide contestant and it would occasion little surprise if he should smash the Byrd Stadium record of 208 feet made by Bill Guckeyson, of Maryland, in the 1937 A. A. U. event at College Park.

Close Contest in "100"

The 100-yard dash should be the most closely contested of the races and it holds intriguing possibilities of revenge, drama and perhaps a record-breaking performance. Seeking honors in the century will be Joe Murphy, Maryland's ace sprinter, who has lost only one in 13 outdoor starts; Mort Alnwick, Murphy's lone conqueror, and George Bogan, defending A. A. U. champion at this distance, both of G. U., and a pair of "dark horse" C. U. men, Roger Cooper and Charley Moutenot. Maryland's Vernon Miller also may be a surprise package.

Any of these six entries could win. Murphy, who has clipped the century in .10 flat several times, and Bogan, who is making his first competitive start of the season, because of his dentistry studies, probably are co-favorites, with Alnwick rated just behind. The College Park record of 0:9.8 belongs to Earl Widmayer, Maryland.

Bethesda-C.C. Defeated, 7-0, By Anacostia

A six-hit shutout was hurled yesterday by Jack Burroughs as the Annacostia High Indians, leading the East section of the Interhigh League, won a 7 to 0 victory over Bethesda-Chevy Chase in an outside game. Burroughs struck out 12. The game featured a return to the Indian line-up of three first-string players—Perry Seaman, Dick Farr and Joe Scott—after becoming scholastically eligible.

The nearest thing to a score Bethesda was able to account for was Johnny Shumate's rousing triple in the second inning. The lanky shortstop was caught stealing home, however, to hold the suburbanites scoreless.

Rumor Tigers Bid For Newsom in Big Player Deal

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 12.—A major player trade between the St. Louis Browns and the Detroit Tigers was rumored here tonight after conferences between officials of the two clubs.

Mentioned as possible tradees were big Buck Newsom, voluble Brownie pitcher, Outfielder Beau Bell and Catcher Billy Sullivan of the Browns, and Pitchers Vernon Kennedy, George Gill, and Roxie Lawson and Catcher George Tebbetts of the Tigers.

Bill Dewitt, Browns vice president, admitted he and President Donald Barnes had talked to Jack Zeller, Detroit executive, but denied a real was pending.

"Zeller did not make any offer to us and we made none to him," Dewitt asserted.

Interior Beats Engraving, 7 to 5

Interior Department baseball team won its fifth straight game in the Departmental League yesterday, beating Bureau of Engraving, 7 to 5, six innings. Four runs in the first gave Interior men a comfortable margin, but Bureau attempted a rally in the fifth that came within two runs of knotting the score. Farrell, third baseman of Interior, hit the only homer in the first, and Vic Gauzza, jr., and Gradin contributed triples.

Rawlings and Rood Reach Final as Terp Entries Are Beaten

By the Associated Press.

Williamsburg, Va., May 12.—Bill Rawlings, of the University of North Carolina, staged the upset of the Southern Conference tennis tournament today to move into the finals.

Rawlings, unseeded in tournament play and No. 5 on the Tar Heel team, knocked the props from under Washington and Lee's flashy Dick Pinck and Maryland's Jack Phillips in straight sets and moved into the semifinals against Bobby Peitch, Richmond's No. 4 seeded player.

Bill Rood, another Tar Heel racquet wielder and seeded No. 3 in the tourney, played only one singles match today to go to the finals. He defeated his Carolina teammate, Charlie Rider, and won by a default over Eddie Fuller, another Carolina player.

Leitch displayed the best overhead game seen in the tournament, but he found his match in the red-headed Rawlings, whose peculiar southpaw style carried him to a 6—2, 5—6, 6—1 triumph over the hitherto consistent Spider star.

SINGLES—Phillips (Maryland) defeated Early (N. C.), 6—1, 6—1; Rawlings (N. C.) defeated Pinck (W. and L.), 6—4, 6—1; Fuller (N. C.) defeated Turner (Davidson), 6—2, 11—9; Askin (Maryland) defeated Ager (Duke), 7—5, 3—6, 6—3.

Semifinal results:

State) defeated Stubien-Teal (W. and M.), 6—2, 6—4; Fuller-W. Rood (N. C.) defeated Boney-Lummis (N. C. State), 6—3, 7—5; Leichliter-Burkom (Md.) defeated Ryder-Letson (W. and M.), 6—1, 6—4.

Johnstown Against Field In Preakness

Five Rivals Named To Start in Historic Race at Pimlico

ing brought no surprises. As was expected W. L. Brann's Challedon will be the only colt who chased Johnstown at Louisville to take another crack at him. The Saratoga stable's Volitant, not eligible for the Derby, was placed in line. Impound, with the Vanderbilt backing, is due to start along with the King Ranch's Ciencia, a filly who will try to spring a "Nellie Morse" on the boys.

"Rain Insurance"

The Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight gets his chance. Despite the fact that he goes to the post coupled in the betting with Johnstown as the trainer Fitzsimmons entry, Gilded Knight is as much a rival of the Derby winner as any horse in the field. This is one entry that will not try to put over a "one-two" punch on the others.

As was the case at the Kentucky Derby, Challenge, Belair Stud stablemate of Johnstown, was named for the Preakness as "rain insurance." If the clear skies continue tomorrow morning, Challenge will be withdrawn just as he was at Louisville. However, if the mud should come up, Challenge as well as Johnstown will start.

Despite the fact that the Preakness is being heralded as a "one horse" race, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and his associates of the Maryland Jockey Club anticipate one of the largest, if not a record, crowds ever to see racing at this track, once a half-day's buggy ride from downtown but now in the city.

Expect 50,000

The track expects from 40,000 to 50,000 fans to see the struggle first run in 1873. While the heavy swing to Johnstown may have taken something away from the race as a contest, the customers seem eager to watch Johnstown in action.

Trainer Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons had Johnstown on the track this morning. He had the colt out for more of a purpose than limbering up. Jockey Jimmy Stout had reported to his boss that in his recent workout, the Derby winner had tried to "duck" out at the gap nearest his stable. Fitzsimmons stood near the clubhouse and watched closely as Johnstown galloped past the gap without flinching. "He's OK and will be ready for the best."

George Tappen, Fitzsimmons' assistant, then walked toward the secretary's office to deposit Johnstown's entry.

Challendon Improved

Trainer Lou Schaefer smiled when someone remarked that it didn't look like rain. However, he dropped Challedon's entry into the box. Regardless of track conditions, Schaefer's friends look for the son of Challenger II to run an improved race. They bear in mind that Challedon had been to the races only once this year before the Derby and the Louisville race probably tightened him.

By coincidence, Johnstown drew the same post position for the Preakness as for the Derby—No. 5. However, he is a swift breaker and, in the small field, Johnstown would be at home in any position. But Volitant, with Jockey Don Meade up, will be beside Johnstown. If anything runs with the Derby winner in the early stages, horsemen believe it will be Volitant. With the two side by side, there should be a keen struggle to the first turn.

Post positions mean little to the others. They must come from behind to have a chance and will be trying to save ground in the early portions of the 13-16 miles contest.

Only Race Will Tell

Only the race will tell what Johnstown will do if Volitant, with the fine front riding Meade aboard, takes a lead of a length or two on the backstretch. Johnstown's handlers are of the opinion that he will rally to a drive and wear down anything that has him headed in the stretch run. In his other races this year, Johnstown has had things pretty much his own way as far as speed was concerned. He did get a brief tussle from El Chico in the first quarter of the Derby and he handled himself in excellent fashion.

Ciencia, the lone filly in the field, is sort of a mystery proposition and she is likely to draw many "beat Johnstown" bets. She turned back a fine field in winning the $50,000 added Santa Anita Derby last winter and has worked well over this track. Trainer Buddy Hirsch is confident that she will be "there or thereabouts."

If five colts and the filly named are starters, the Preakness will have a gross value of $71,346. The race will be worth $53,710 to Johnstown, Gildeed Knight, Challedon or Volitant and $32,345 if the winner is Impound or Ciencia, the latter pair being supplementary entries.

Zanelli to Finish Mamakos Training In Public Sessions

Ralph Zanelli, Boston welterweight, will stage at least four public workouts here next week to top off his training program for the match May 22 with Steve Mamakos in the District's first outdoor boxing show of the season at Griffith Stadium.

Arrangements for the public punching acts were announced last night by Promoter Joe Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn. The former National A. A. U. lightweight champion will train at one of three places—Turner's Arena, the National Sporting Club gym, 519 Morse street northeast, or at Griffith Farms.

Mamakos, the local fighter who is gunning for a position in the circle of welterweight title challengers, is training at the National Guard Armory. A victory over Zanelli would improve his prestige and sixth rating on the National Boxing Association's ladder.

Big 4th Gives Landon Win Over Prep, 16-5

D. C. Team Scores 9 Runs in Outburst Against Little Hoyas

Landon Prep, with a nine-run uprising in the fourth, came from behind to trounce the Georgetown Prep nine yesterday at Garrett Park, 16 to 5. Bill Garland gave up only two hits in the seven inning game, while Landon pounded Wimsatt, Decker and Doggett for 11 safeties. Becker hit a home run for the Little Hoyas with none on in the fourth.

Landon's spree in the fourth was assisted considerably by Wimsatt's six bases on balls, an error by second baseman Powell and a hit batsmen. Landon contributed to its own cause, however, with two doubles and as many singles. Dave Maloney, with three safeties in five times up, was the batting star for the winners.

Spot Cotton Strong, Rising 50 Cents a Bale

New York, May 12. (AP)—The May cotton delivery held a strong position today while later positions wobbled. The final range was 10 points higher to 4 lower. The market got off to a slow start—May declined 5 points early—but when selling dried up, the list started on an upward tilt that left closing quotations around the day's highs.

Steadiness marked the spot delivery when shorts were forced to bid up the price in order to obtain contracts. Ring observers linked May demand with difficulties of obtaining certain grades of the staple for immediate shipment.

Foreign liquidation was fairly heavy in the morning and Bombay sold May and July against purchases of March. Hedge selling affected distant months. Southern reports indicated that small amounts of cotton were still coming out of government loan stocks.

Grain Belt Rains Shade Wheat Prices

Sudden Demand Lifts Rye Futures as Much As 1¾ Cents a Bushel

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 12.—Selling induced by reports of scattered showers in parts of the grain belt offset buying based on unfavorable crop reports and gave the wheat market a lower trend today.

Sudden demand for rye that lifted prices as much as 1¾ cents at one time, September rye going to 50⅛, highest of the season, attracted attention. About half of the upturn was lost later, however. Shortage of moisture in parts of the main producing area and fear of frost and grasshopper damage induced buying. A 1939 harvest of 46,704,000 bushels has been forecast, compared with 55,039,000 bushels last year.

Although wheat prices rose at times as much as ½ cent above previous closing levels, the market was weak most of the session. A lower close at Liverpool, where quotations were ¼ to ⅝ off, also had a depressing effect here. The weather forecast indicated continued showery conditions over central and western Kansas and Nebraska. However, crop experts said showers could give little or only partial relief in many dry districts and that general soaking rains were needed.

Many Fluctuations

Wheat closed unchanged to ½ lower than yesterday, July and September 73½@73⅝. Corn was ⅛ off to ⅛ up, July 51¾@51⅞, September 52⅜; oats ¼ to ⅜ lower; rye ⅝ to 1 cent higher; lard 5 lower.

May wheat continued to fluctuate widely, ranging from 77¾ to 79 and closing at 78⅜. Outstanding contracts for delivery this month were reduced only about 600,000 bushels in yesterday's big trade and the total remaining for settlement exceeded 6,000,000 bushels when the market opened. This settlement must be made either by operations in the pit the next night session or by delivery of actual grain before the end of the month. No wheat has been delivered as yet and actual grain is quoted higher than May contracts.

With all hedges on grain destroyed in yesterday's elevator fire removed from the wheat, corn, oats and soy bean pits, the market had little support from this type of business. The fire destroyed an estimated 10 per cent of Chicago's elevator space but did not seriously reduce the ample warehousing capacity.

Prices Drift Lower in Apathetic Market New Federal Spending Program Reported Treasury Bonds Recede From Highs

New York, May 12—With fewer than 600 of the 1,260 listed issues traded in a session that ended with quotations mostly on the soft side, the stock market maintained the recent tradition of Friday dullness. Big board turnover for the five hours today was but 343,530 shares, only a trifle better than on Friday of last week. While the index of 100 stocks showed a loss of only 0.22 point, declines in some of the pivotals, more particularly active descriptions ran to a point or more. In general it was a lifeless and boresome affair.

In the bond section, dullness also was pronounced, but most of the gilt-edged liens, domestic and foreign, held steady. Treasuries eased slightly on reports that local banks were curtailing purchases of long maturities. Foreign exchanges were nominally firm. May cotton was up 10 points to a new high, but other months were unchanged to lower. Wheat ended even to slightly lower.

Elements which could have led to discouragement for share purchases included Washington reports that a new spending program, to be financed out of the $1,335,000,000 raised from social security pay roll taxes is being devised by certain officials; that nothing very positive can be expected from Congress or the Administration this session in the way of tax revision, and from various news items which show continued lack of vitality in many industries. In addition, the suggestion that Mr. Lewis had obtained a closed shop for soft coal miners partly through assistance from higher up, caused wrinkles of worry here and there, particularly among those who believe the Lewis influence is more detrimental than beneficial to the broad interests of the United States.

Longer Week-ends

While these factors may have cut a bit of ice in the matter of reducing trading, it is more probable that the approaching weekend was more of an influence. In these dull days, Wall street's big stock and bond men are taking a leaf from the book of their British contemporaries, leaving early and returning late on week-ends which sometimes stretched from Thursday night through Monday. This applies, of course, only to the more affluent, whether brokers or operators. The others, who may even constitute a majority, still hold to the pre-Roosevelt working schedules and eke out such business as may be available. Sometimes—like today—the amount is anemic.

Motor output for the week showed a small gain and this was unexpected. Chrysler, the day's leader, moved a point lower, however, and General Motors gave up ½ point. With the exception of rail equipments, this division showed the most general as well as the widest declines. Steels also were off rather substantially although such operating news as came out during the day indicated little change in schedules for the next week.

Steel Prices

Talk of price cutting in steel products, however, appeared on increase, however, appeared on the increase. The concessions, so far at least, it appears, are coming from small units which need business very badly to keep personnel busy. In the copper section, the seepage of values was mild but steady. The splurge of buying Wednesday was not followed up and Thursday's sales of metal in the domestic market were only approximately one tenth of the tonnage which changed hands the day before.

Rails confined losses, for the most part, the fractions. An exception was Union Pacific, off 1⅞. Among the equipments, American Brake Shoe lost 2 and American Car & Foundry 1½.

U. S. Steel preferred, which closed at 107, a new low for the year, reflected street gossip concerning current earnings, of the industry as well as of the leading interest.

Bonds Are Irregular

Traders shopped selectively in today's bond market which closed with about an even distribution of fractional gains and losses. Bids were entered for various miscellaneous corporate loans on the theory they represented good buying levels for trading purposes, or on good news affecting individual issues. This support was partly offset by scattered selling in other ratings.

Like stocks, bonds showed only a lukewarm response to indications of an early termination of the soft coal controversy.

U. S. Governments were mildly reactionary in spots after several sessions of steady gain. With declines predominating, the list closed 6-32ds lower and 6-32ds higher.

Up fractions to a point in the corporate division were Western Union 5s of '60 at 60½, Utilities Power and Light 5s at 69, Shell Union 3½s at 106, Pennsylvania Dixie Cement 6s at 97, Delaware & Hudson Refunding 4s at 58¾, Goodrich 6s at 101, International Paper 5s at 98½.

Foreign Funds For U. S. Goods Twice Year Ago

But With Part of the Money Held in Banks Exports Drop 15.3%

New York, May 12.—During the first quarter this year, merchandise, gold and silver imports provided foreign countries with a total of $1,294,000,000 which could have been used for the purchase of American goods, as compared with only $828,000,000 in the same period last year, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

This year, however, foreign countries used only part of these funds to buy American goods, while last year they not only used the entire amount, but they drew on funds which they had previously accumulated in the United States. Exports of merchandise from the United States in the first quarter, consequently, dropped to $700,000,000 this year from $826,000,000 in the same period last year, a decrease of 15.3 per cent.

The balance remaining to foreign countries this year, after the financing of the purchasing of American goods, amounted to $594,000,000. Part of this was invested in American securities, but most of it went into foreign bank balances in this country. This meant a further large addition to the supply of funds which foreign countries have been accumulating in this country since 1933. It is apparent that foreign countries are in a position to finance a much larger volume of buying in the United States than they have recently been doing.

Under present conditions, however, it is not likely that these foreign funds will be used for this purpose, since a greater part of the supply of foreign funds has been sent to the United States for safekeeping rather than for the purchase of American goods. If a European war should break out, however, it is probable that foreigners would use these funds to obtain supplies from the United States. An export trade boom is thus in prospect for the United States in the event of a war.

Egg Prices Hit 5-Year Low for May

Chicago, May 12 (AP).—Wholesale egg prices dipped ¼ to ½ cent a dozen today to the lowest May level in five years. Weakness in the market was attributed to persistently liberal Central West production and indications that April hatching set an all-time record. Fresh graded firsts were quoted at 15½ cents in less than carlots and 15¾ in carlots compared with 16 to 16¼ cents yesterday.

Influenced by the cash market the current storage packed and October refrigerator contracts slumped to new seasonal bottoms. The May contracts dropped ⅛ cents to 17¼, a new low for the delivery since 1934, while Octobers eased 6 points to 18.5 cents.

3 Cigarettes Gain Faster Than Industry

U. S. Production for 9 Months to March 31 Exceeds 123 Billion

New York, May 12.—In the struggle to gain popular favor and volume of production, three cigarettes appear to have made such progress in the last year that their gains are greater than those of the industry as a whole, according to the Wall Street Journal today. These brands are Philip Morris, which in six years has risen from nothing to fourth place in the race; Lucky Strike which for approximately a year and a half has been surging back to the high position which it once held, and Sensation, the entry of P. Lorillard Co. in the 10-cent cigarette field.

In the nine months ended March 31, the entire tobacco industry produced 123,700,094 cigarettes compared with 122,809,301,352 in like period of the previous fiscal year, an increase of 891,673,742 cigarettes.

During the same period, sales of the Philip Morris brand of Philip Morris & Co., Ltd., increased more than 1,200,000,000, or roughly 33 per cent better than the gain for the industry as a whole. Gains such as these by one or more brands do not necessarily mean that all others lost ground.

Camel Holds First Place

According to a survey by the Wall Street Journal, Camel of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. continues in first place, with something over 26 per cent of the total production. Lucky Strike of American Tobacco Co., however, has gained steadily in recent months, and now accounts for roughly 25 per cent of the total production. This would indicate that Camel had lost about 1 per cent over the last year, and that Lucky Strike has gained by the same amount or slightly more.

Chesterfield, of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., the survey indicates, is selling about 22 per cent

Sees Washington Attracting Sea-Going Commerce by 1945

A picture of the National Capital as a modern port, attracting maritime commerce from distant seas, was painted yesterday by Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, chief of Army Engineers, at dedication ceremonies for the Norment Tower at Twelfth street and Maine avenue southwest.

A memorial to the late Clarence F. Norment, sr., former chairman of the board of the Terminal Refrigerating and Warehousing Corporation, the 70-foot tower is expected to be completed late in June.

Cornerstone in Cornice

The cornerstone was laid yesterday by Clarence F. Norment, jr., at the cornice of the terminal building, 25 feet above street level. A large illuminating clock in the tower will be visible at night in East Potomac Park, across the Washington Channel, while its chimes can be heard from beyond the site of the Jefferson Memorial.

Gen. Schley predicted that by 1945 the Washington Harbor will be capable of accommodating sea-going ships with draft of 24 feet.

Hazen Is Speaker

Col. Wrisley Brown, president of the Terminal Refrigerating and Warehousing Corporation, paid tribute to Mr. Norment as "a man of strength and poise and power . . ." Other speakers were Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Col. Charles D. Young, vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Women's Shoes 'Pretzelize' Toes, Says Veteran D.C. Doctor

Dr. Rice, 2d Oldest Doctor in City in Point of Practice, Will Give Paper at Richmond Meeting Today; Laments Chic Styles

A Washingtonian, who, in years of practice, is the second oldest podiatrist in the United States, will present a scientific paper at the semiannual meeting of the Middle Atlantic Podiatry Society opening in Richmond today.

He is Dr. E. C. Rice, who has been treating afflictions of the feet since November, 1886. Only one other podiatrist, or chiropdist, is his senior in length of practice, and that by only one year.

Yesterday Dr. Rice, who will lecture on foot infection at the Richmond convention, looked back over more than a half century of treating the pedal extremities of men, women and children, and concluded:

That women's tricky shoe styles, climaxed by the comparatively recent "cut-out" which exposes heel and toes, may be chic but they also succeed in "pretzelizing" the toes.

That more children, even infants, have foot problems than you might suppose.

That the podiatrist's busiest season is in the spring, when the temperature varies from day to day, affecting circulation in the feet.

That the best insurance against corns, bunions and reshaping of feet is shoes properly made and fitted.

Dr. Rice does not scoff at the claim of some people that their corns are weather forecasters.

"It is conceivable," he said, "that corns are hydroscopic and thus sensitive to atmospheric changes, in which case their warnings might well be accurate."

He was 19 years old when he went to work as an apprentice in a Boston podiatry office, which was the first to be established in this country. Next year it will celebrate its centennial. Up to 25 years ago or so there were no special schools, or even departments, for the teaching of foot medicine.

Dr. Rice has been in practice here continuously since 1887. He was graduated from Columbia Medical College (now George Washington) in 1897, although an M. D. degree has never been required to practice podiatry.

South American Indian Tribe Lives Only for Glory of Death

Yaruros Believe Their Hope of Happiness Was Lost When World Was Young, Says Smithsonian Report by Petrullo

The sad faith of a South American Indian tribe which lost hope of happiness when the world was young and no wives only to die was told yesterday by Vincenzo Petrullo in a report issued by the Smithsonian Institution.

Dr. Petrullo told of finding the Yaruros, a primitive tribe of nomads, wandering along the remote rivers of Venezuela.

They believe themselves the first men created of all the Indian tribes, by the great mother Kuma, ruler of heaven. Kuma, they think, gave the Yaruros all the plants and animals now used by the white man, but they were frightened by the horses and cows and lost their gifts.

Now they have only the possessions they can carry in their canoes and believe the white man got his superior wealth by sheer wickedness, Dr. Petrullo said.

Beyond this, however, they have their faith in Kuma, and the open plains to live in where they can be in close touch with her. They believe the falling stars are messengers from Kuma to encourage her chosen people. The fixed stars are their ancestors who live with Kuma.

In March and early April they see the Western sky glowing with the reflection of Kuma's land, described as a vast savannah, with plenty of game and horses for everyone.

"To the Yaruro, death is a desirable event," said Dr. Petrullo. "He will lead a life of eternal bliss, watching over the affairs of his relatives and descendants on this earth, and visiting them occasionally. His only wish is that his people will die and join him in the land of Kuma at the earliest possible time."

Fishermen Row 150 Miles Before Rescue After Wreck

One Dory Reaches Shore; Only 1 of 48 In 2 Crews Lost

By the Canadian Press.

Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, May 12. Forty-seven fishermen, all but one man of the crews of two New England schooners which collided and sank 100 miles at sea early Wednesday, were safe in port tonight after rowing open dories toward land for two days and a night. The forty-eighth was dead.

Most of the fishermen were picked up about 20 miles off the Nova Scotia coast and brought to Yarmouth.

Three beached their dory near Jonesport, Me., none the worse for their long open sea pull, which started when the Gloucester schooner Edith C. Rose and the Isabelle Parker, of Boston, collided in a fog and quickly sank.

Frank Nickerson, 62, of Argyle Sound, Nova Scotia, died. Survivors said he apparently suffered a heart attack aboard the Isabelle Parker shortly after the collision. His body was brought ashore in one of the dories.

Without Food, Water

Without food, water or compass, the fishermen—many only partly clad—had rowed many miles before rescuers sighted them. Capt. Albert Hines, of the Edith C. Rose, said men in his dory rowed 150 miles before they were saved. A calm sea aided the fishermen, who were about midway between Boston and Yarmouth when the accident happened. sank five minutes after the crash opened a gaping hole amidships. The fishermen were able to launch two dories, but many were forced to jump into the chill sea with only lifebelts.

The Isabelle Parker settled quickly and sank 20 minutes later. Those in dories picked up men in the water before heading toward land. At first the dories managed to keep within sight of one another, but later were separated.

First to be picked up was a boatload sighted by the gasoline boat Amacita after they had rowed 80 miles. Others were rescued off the Digby County coast, where they were landed and transported overland to Yarmouth.

Some Exhausted

Some of the fishermen were treated for exhaustion and exposure, but all were able to make ready for the return trip to Boston.

The bow watch on the Isabelle Parker, Fred A. Bourque, of Lynn, Mass., said only 20 yards of water separated the schooners when he sighted the Edith C. Rose looming through the mist.

"I shouted a warning to the man at the wheel, Billy Gilman, of Boston, but he had no chance to avoid the crash," he said. "I managed to jump back to keep from being crushed. Our boat went almost through the Rose.

"We had time to get some equipment ready, but we had no food or water and we couldn't waste time looking, for the Parker was sinking under our feet. It wasn't a very pleasant sensation."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Your slave is going to take off a few days next week for a short vacation. We have prevailed upon several of the leading bridge experts to hold the fort while we are gone.

The experts you will meet here next week will be Lee Hazen, member of the winning team of four in the recent Vanderbilt Cup championship; Geoffrey Mott-Smith, secretary of the American Contract Bridge League laws committee; Walter Malowan, secretary and treasurer of the Regency Club; R. F. Foster, card wizard and former editor of "Hoyle's Card Games;" Mrs. A. M. Sobel, woman champion, and Baron Valdemar von Zedtwitz, international expert and one-time holder of every major championship in the country.

One of the chief functions of experts is to invent new bids and plays for the rest of us to use. This is a practice inherited from the days of whist.

The invention of the high-low signal in defensive play, used constanly in contract bridge, is credited to Joseph B. Elwell, famous authority on bridge and auction bridge.

He was supposed to have figured out the scheme of discarding or playing a card in a given suit, and subsequently discarding or playing a lower card in the same suit, thereby completing the high-low echo, or up-and-down, as it is sometimes called.

Occasionally the high-low is delayed, like a delayed forward pass in football. Several tricks may intervene before partner can complete the play. It is therefore necessary that defenders watch their partners' first two discards and all the rest for the important signal.

In the hand shown in today's box, the start of the high-low came on trick two, but was not completed until trick eight. The deal was played by Kenneth McM. Dickey, Kansas City expert.

West opened the club deuce and South put up dummy's jack as he wanted the lead on the board. After the jack held, South decided to attack the spade suit, figuring that if his king lost he would have a later finesse to dummy's queen ten. On this second trick East played the three.

Sure enough, West took the king with the ace and led another small club. South won and led three rounds of hearts, which put West in. West cashed his club ace, and when that suit broke took his thirteener for the eighth trick.

On the last club East completed his spade high-low by discarding the deuce. West, a careless player, had his four tricks strewn on the table and not properly racked into a book. While wool-gathering he had failed to see East's high-low and now led a diamond.

Had West led a spade, as his partner requested, South would have been down one.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

AS THIS is written, Judge Mark Question of The Washington Post's Umbrella Court of the Air is in his sanctum preparing a list of questions for the finalists who appear before him Friday night to establish a Federal beauty who also is endowed with brains. Elsewhere in The Post this morning the identity of this girl is announced. She is the "Miss Beauty with Brains" who, next Friday will go to the New York World's Fair as the guest of the American Federation of Government Employes. She also will be the honor guest at the fair on Saturday, Government Employes Day.

The point now is to whoop up a big crowd to accompany her to New York. The opportunity to go with her to the fair is afforded by the American Federation of Government Employes, co-sponsor of the contest. This organization has arranged for a special train to carry the party. It will leave here Friday, May 19, at 1:30 p. m., and the anticipated train-load of Washingtonians will be housed either at the Hotel Picadilly or President. They will receive tickets to the reception honoring "Miss Beauty with Brains."

"If this party follows the line of previous events sponsored under the supervision of Herbert Strople and Eddie McGinnis—chairman and vice chairman, respectively, of the A. F. G. E.'s ways and means committee—guests are in for the time of their lives." the organization announces.

THE Interior Department's I. D. R. A. News issues a somber warning to the members: "Don't be a sucker. There are subtle forms of seemingly innocuous activities in and around Washington to inveigle the thousands of Government employes, who have come here from the small towns of the country, out of their dollars. The most vicious are the near-by race tracks, Washington bookies and sweepstakes and numbers' agents. Don't be a sucker, you ain't got a chance, folks."

"Uncle Sam's Stepchildren" have become the subject of an exhaustive study by a committee, which remarks on the failure of the Government to provide any consistent educational policy for them. It is asserted in the report that the Federal Government "should establish a policy which assures free school facilities for all children of Federal employes living on Federal reservations and foreign stations." The authors say that "the present haphazard policy, if indeed it may be called a policy at all, is unjust to many parents and children."

Commenting on the case, the N. F. F. E. says: "This report highlights a condition which, for too many years now, has been permitted to go on, contradicting a fundamental American principle. Congress should take immediate steps to carry out the recommendation of the committee; namely, "to appropriate sufficient funds to provide or assist in providing the children with school facilities.'"

A one-reel sound film, "For the People," depicting the National Capital Park system and the part it plays in the daily lives of residents of the National Capital, will be viewed by television and on the motion picture screen by visitors to the New York World's Fair. Interior officials say the film had been chosen for inclusion on the program of motion pictures to be televised by the National Broadcasting Co. The program will be broadcast from the television station in Radio City and will be received at the N. B. C. television demonstration headquarters in the fair grounds. The movie is designed to show the beauties of Washington. It received its premiere showing at the annual dinner of the Washington Board of Trade and has been given considerable theatrical exhibition since then. The office of motion pictures, Interior Department, produced the film.

Bob Burns Says—

Here lately the world has been moving a little too fast for me I guess. Just yesterday I offered my little 4-year-old niece one of them beautiful Shirley Temple dolls, and she says, "Dolls! Dolls! I tell you I'm sick of this world of make-believe!"

And just last week I visited an actor friend of mine and when he was called to the phone his 5-year-old boy brought me two large books.

I says, "What are these, son, Fairy Tales?"

The boy says, "How quaint you are. Of course they're not Fairy Tales. In this first book, Mater pastes all the snapshots of me in which I look just too cute for words. And in this other book she writes all my clever precocious remarks."

CORRECTION! In yesterday's Post an advertisement for S & S Radio Co. carried the statement "Any Radio Repaired—75c." The advertisement should also have carried the statement "Parts if needed at reasonable prices."

The Post acknowledges and regrets this error.

Secrets in Love

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

Peg put the receiver back on the hook." Well, that's that," she thought. But her face disclosed her emotion

Synopsis

Peg Patterson works in the office of Otto Nelson, rich Washington broker, who is her godfather and guardian. She is in love with Hewitt Gill, a salesman in the office who is ambitious for a partnership and professes to love Peg. Anthony Covington is a young State Department attache whom Peg meets at an antique sale. But later Peg witnessed a shooting in a dark garage when she hid to escape from Anthony. She is terror-stricken because she feels she was witness to a murder, and she rushes back to the office to phone Mr. Nelson. Hewitt is not there, so she cannot tell him of her troubles, and seeking solace from Maizie, the latter warns her about Hewitt. Then Peg goes out to dinner at the corner drugstore and goes to typing class. On reaching home she recognizes her brother's car out front.

Chapter VI.

Duncan was a handsome young man, not especially tall, but solidly, perfectly built with crisp dark hair, brush cut, rugged features and a decisive chin. That chin explained how he had made West Point and ultimately a commission in the Army. Not having the political contacts for an appointment, he had done it the hard way—two years' enlistment as a private, a prep course at Fort Monroe and competive examinations afterward. But for all his firm jaw and serious ruggedness of face, for all his keen inventive mind which was recognized at Wright Field as bordering closely on genius, there was usually an irrepressible gayety about him.

There was no gayety about Duncan's face now, however. Peg, looking at him through eyes that were vaguely alarmed, saw the furrowed brow, the upper teeth clamped down hard on his full lower lip, the sagging weariness of his body.

He came straight to her, hugged her brutally, ruffled her hair and hugged her again. It was the way he always greeted her. It was exactly the same, and yet it wasn't the same at all. Her heart cried: "Duncan, what is it? What's happened?" But she couldn't say that. Nineteen years of being Duncan's sister had made her realize that you couldn't say things like that to Duncan Patterson; you couldn't ask questions . . . you just had to wait.

Duncan said: "How's the corkscrew language going? Wearing you down?"

"To a nub," said Peg brightly. "The typing's awful. My lazy red fox simply won't jump over the high brown fence. He turns brown under my capable fingers and jumps into a red bed. And as for shorthand. Well, confidentially, Dunc, I think the Messrs. Gregg and Pitman ought to have their noses tweaked."

Not a Stranger

Then suddenly her forced frivolity dropped from her like a mantle. Over Duncan's shoulder she saw Aunt Mehalie sitting very prim and stiff by the flickering light of the hearth. She wasn't alone. A very tall young man was with her. He was leaning against the mantel negligently, a spiral of smoke curling up like an adder from the cigarette in his fingers. He was in full evening dress now, looking even more handsome than he had this afternoon in his wedding splendor.

Duncan saw her wide eyes. He said, his voice amused: "Tony Covington's not exactly hard on the optics, is he, Peg? He's a swell guy, too. You'll like him. We struck up a friendship in Manila when he came out from China with some refugees after the bombing of Shanghai."

In that moment Anthony Covington looked up from Aunt Mehalie's pale, chattering lips and saw Peg standing there in the dim amethyst shadows of the hall. His face lightened; he started to speak and then, glancing swiftly at Aunt Mehalie, who in her primness was the very symbol of convention, seemed to think better of it and didn't speak at all. He let Duncan present him. His face was very serious. He said without a single inflection in his voice: "How do you do." But his gray eyes were wickedly amused.

Duncan began to draw up chairs by the fire. He was saying: "I think Peg ought to dash along with us tonight to that embassy reception. I can call my attache friend and get an invitation lined up easily enough."

But Peg heard nothing but the sharp ring of the telephone, a burst of bells shattering the quiet calm of that spacious old Georgetown home. She got up quickly and rushed into the hall, nearly overturning a chair in her hurry. Her hand trembled as she put the receiver to her ear.

Telephone Call

Mr. Nelson said furiously, "Peg, that you? Well, just what was the idea sending me on a wild goose chase like that? I got in touch with the police. We went to that home. There was no one dead there. No one shot. There was not a remnant of a struggle in the garage, not a drop of bloodstain anywhere. Senor Pedro Gonzales, who lives there assured us that he had been home all day, that his servants had been off, that he had not been out of the house—not even in his garage—and therefore had not been shot! I've spent a good hour apologizing to Senor Gonzales and to the gentlemen from the Third Precinct. Trying to convince them, too, that I hadn't just escaped from St. Elizabeth's. Look here, if you ever let your wild histronic imagination get me into a thing like that again . . . I'll . . . by the gods, I'll . . ."

Peg put the receiver back on the hook. "Well, that's that," she thought. She couldn't know, of course, that it wasn't.

To Be Continued.

U.S. May Take Veteran Case to Supreme Court

Denies Ruling Will Affect Thousands of Ex-Soldiers' Claims

The Solicitor General's office, it was learned yesterday, is considering an appeal to the Supreme Court from a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals here which some veterans' groups describe as opening the way to "thousands" of ex-service men for payments denied them by the Veterans Administration.

In a decision read April 17 by Justice Vinson, the appellate court ruled that the Veterans Administration has no right to deduct any claim it may have on a veteran from its own payment of a court judgment in the veteran's behalf.

The Administration's claim, according to the decision, must also be a matter of court judgment.

Minimizing the scope of the decision, one Veterans Administration official yesterday said, "There isn't more than one case in five years involving the same principle."

According to Maj. L. R. Elkins, past commander of the President's Garrison of the Army and Navy Union, however, the Circuit Court of Appeals decision "invalidates a whole series of Star Chamber proceedings by the Veterans Administration."

Seal to Rule on Benefits For Ex-D. C. Employe

Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal yesterday pondered whether J. P. Donlan, a former employe of the District Unemployment Compensation Board, is eligible for unemployment benefits. Under the law, employes under the classification act are not entitled to benefit payments.
